AUSCULUM.

This city was situated about six miles north of the river Aufidus, the southern boundary of the great northern plains of Apulia, and was about nine miles distant from Herdonia. Plutarch spelt the name Ἄσκλον and Appian, Asculanus, but on the coins it is spelt in Oscan letters Auhuskli ΑΥΙΥΣΚΛ and in later coins ΑΥCΚΛΑ, the ΑΥ was transliterated Os by some, as by Festus "Osculana pugna" (p. 197).
The modern city called Ascoli is built upon the old site on the low hills which rise from the edge of the plain until they join the Apennines.
The remains of the ancient city still to be seen outside the walls of Ascoli show that Ausculum flourished during the Empire, and as late as the reign of Valentinian, and from the absence of any mention of the city in the works of Strabo or Pliny we are led to regard the growth of its importance as due to the Romans rather than to the Apulians.
The most famous event connected with the city is the battle which was fought in the plain near its walls between the Romans and Pyrrhus in the year 269 B.C. Florus gives an interesting account of the battle (I, XVIII) and describes the confusion wrought by the elephants in the army of Pyrrhus.
Pyrrhus was beaten "and retreated carried off by his guards, on his own shield" with a wound in his shoulder. Plutarch in his life of Pyrrhus (21) describes two days fighting, the first favourable to the Romans the second to Pyrrhus, and says that when Pyrrhus was congratulated on his victory he replied "Such another victory and we are undone". Pyrrhus was much enfeebled by the losses he sustained, but the Romans easily made good their great loss of men. From Ausculum Pyrrhus returned to Tarentum and left Italy for Sicily.

BARIUM.

The founder of the ancient city called Barium was probably a Peucetian of Pelasgic origin who had emigrated from Arcadia. The site chosen was on the coast of the Adriatic about thirty five miles south of the river Aufidus, and about seventy five north of Brundusium.

The ancient legend is found in the 41st of the Fables of Antoninus Liberalis.

But few remains of Barium remain to our day; only a few Roman inscriptions, some painted Greek vases and a few copper coins are left, but these are sufficient to show how freely the ancient citizens received the culture of the Greeks of Tarentum, which lies nearly sixty miles distant almost due south of Barium.

Ancient writers do not often refer to this city, Livy merely mentions that the left wing of the fleet kept the coast up to Barium in 181 B.C. (XL, 18.), and Horace relates his journey in his Satires (lib. I, v, 90) "Next day the weather was better, the road worse, even to the very walls of Barium that abounds in fish".

Tacitus mentions that Silanus was exiled "to a municipium of Apulia called Barium" (Ann. XVI, 9).

Strabo merely mentions Barium without giving any information about the place, he says "Egnatia was the general place to stop at for those travelling to Barium as well by land as by sea. The run is made when the wind blows from the south. The territory of the Peucetii extends as far as this along the coast.... The distance from Brentesium to Barium is about 700 stadia". Pliny (H. N., III, xi) just mentions this city. The towns of the Paediculi are Rhudia, Egnatia, Barium. Its position as a sea port on the great Roman road afterwards called the via Trajana gave it some importance, and it was only 40 miles from Canusium.

Style various, sometimes fair, at others rude.

II. Size .6. Same types, the only difference being that only one star appears on the Obverse, and no dolphin on the Reverse.

The stars are marks of value perhaps of one and two libellæ.

There is only one type known of the coins of Barium, and with slight modifications it appears on the double libellæ, the libellæ, and the sembellæ.

BUTUNTUM

Butuntum is one of the Daunian towns of Pelasgic origin situated on the plains near the sea, in the southern part of Apulia. It lay on the road afterwards called Via Trajana, halfway between Rubi on the West and Barium on the East, about ten miles from each; about thirty miles south of Canusium and fifty miles north of Tarentum.

The city is not mentioned by Livy or Strabo, nor indeed by any ancient author except Pliny, who if he means this city by his reference to the "Butuntinentes" as among the cities of Calabria, must have made a mistake (III, xi).

The site is correctly given however in the ancient Itineraries. We may be perhaps allowed to hope that as the city appears to have no history, its happiness and prosperity was such as its plentiful supply of bronze coins would lead us to imagine it enjoyed.

It is perhaps on account of the way in which the city was mentioned by Pliny that the coins of Butuntum are arranged among those of Calabria in the British Museum Catalogue, although the nearest point on the borders of Apulia and Calabria is more than thirty miles from the site of the city.

The coins of Butuntum which remain are all of bronze, and bear witness by their types to the influence of Tarentum. For instance the cockle shell, the figures of Taras riding the dolphin, and the head of Pallas wearing a Corinthian helmet.

The coins of Butuntum bearing the ear of barley with two leaves remind us of those of Metapontum, but they may after all merely bear witness to the cultivation of barley on the fertile plains around the city. The type of a crab mentioned by Dr Head (Hist. Num., p. 38) is difficult to explain, for Butuntum was five miles distant from the sea shore, and the city on whose coins the crab is a familiar emblem, is the far off Agrigentum in Sicily.

CAELIA.

There are two ancient cities which bore the name of Caelia, the one situated about six miles to the south of Barium, and the other about twenty five miles west of Brundusium, on the borders of Apulia and Calabria. Mommsen and Tomasi in Bull. del Inst., 1834, p. 54) are of opinion that the coins bearing KAIVINΩN belong to the first named city near Barium, because they are frequently found there. This is also the opinion of Milingen (Num. de l'Italie, p. 148).

Strabo just mentions it among the cities on the road from Brundusium to Rome; "Hence there are two ways to Rome; one, which is only walked by mules through the Peucetii, who are called Pœdicli, the Daunii, and the Samnites, as far as Beneventum on which road in the city Egnatia then Caelia, Netium, Canusium and Herdonia."

This is confirmed by the Tab. Peut. which places Cœlia nine miles from Butuntum on the road the Egnatia. There is still a village on this site called Ceglie five miles south of Bari.

Many tombs, vases, coins and other remains have been found on this site (Romanelli, vol. II, p. 177; Mommsen, Unter Ital. Dialekte, p. 62).

CANUSIUM.

The name of a city or the name of a man recalls to mind many different appearances or conditions; thus, London under the Romans, the Normans, the Tudors or the Hanoverians presents to our mind very varied images. So the image of Nero in his youth is very different from that of his later years.

When we try to picture to ourselves the Canusium in which our coins were current we must remember that the rude primitive city of the Pelagic Daunians, whose hero, Diomed, figures on some of the types, had been transformed by the influence of the Tarentines into a Greek city, whose buildings no doubt were as much copied from those of Tarentum as were its coins. Many of these same coins of Canusium were probably current in the days when the Roman fugitives from Cannae entered its walls.

As the London streets have echoed with the Latin of the Romans, Norman-French of the Normans, and the English of the Plantagenets and Elizabethans, so those of Canusium must have resounded with the language of the early Pelasgians, the Greek of their Tarentine friends, and the Latin of their Roman conquerors.

The Caelusian Greek coins bear witness to the culture of the vine by the amphorae and wine-cups appearing on the obols, which they copied from those of Tarentum.

The lyre on some of these coins may show that the cult of Apollo was as common among the citizens as that of Dionysus.

The figure of a horse-soldier reminds us not only of the Tarentine cavalry so often illustrated on the coins of that city, but also of the herds of horses reared on the Apulian plains.

This most ancient Daunian (Canusium) city was situated near the south bank of the river Aufidus, about twelve miles west of Rudi, and the same distance from the mouth of the river.

Ausculum lay about twenty-seven miles to the west. The road from Brundusium to Beneventum ran through Canusium.

Strabo (VI, p. 283 Casaub.) speaking of Arpi and Canusium says: "They are said to have been both founded by Diomed, and both the plain of Diomed and many other things are shown in these districts as evidence of his having possessed them."

Many cities are chiefly remembered in connection with some great battle, as for instance, Hastings and Waterloo; similarly, Canusium is most generally known as the refuge of the defeated Roman army on the night following the great battle of Cannæ. The site of the battle is about six miles distant from the city, along the course of the Aufidus towards the sea. Livy (XXII) tells us how Publius Sempronius Tuditanus bravely led the refugees into the city.

From the story of the battle we gather that the River Aufidus was shallow enough to enable the armies to cross it without difficulty. It can hardly therefore have formed a natural boundary between the original Daunians and Peucettians.

The first historical notice of the city appears to be that of Livy (IX, 20) who tells us that the Canusians took the part of the Samnites in their wars against the Romans, untill L. Plautius, in the year 318 B.C. forced them to submit in order to save their territories from repeated devastations. From that date they appear to have been steadfast in their loyalty to Rome; throughout the Second Punic War.

Canusium maintained its importance untill a late period in the Middle Ages, although it suffered severely from the ravages of the Lombards and Saracens.

The modern city, now called Canossa, is situated on a slight hill which probably formed the citadel of the ancient Canusium. Most of the ruins now to be seen are of later Roman date; they are described by Swinburne in his "Travels" (vol. I, p. 401).

The most interesting relics of the ancient city besides its coins are the objects which have been found in its tombs, especially the painted vases, which are scarcely inferior to those of Nola. But though inferior in style of art they are clearly of Greek origin. Greek seems to have been the language there when the Romans conquered the city, and for long afterwards, for Horace calls the people "Canusini bilinguis" (Sat. I, 10.30) probably referring to their speaking both Greek and Latin in his time.

The territory of Canusium was adapted to the growth of vines as well as of corn, but was specially celebrated for its wool, which appears to have been manufactured on the spot into a particular kind of cloth much prized for its durability.

URIUM or HYRIA of APULIA

Three cities of Southern Italy bore the name Hyria : one in Campania which was also known as Nola, another which Herodotus calls the most ancient of the Messapian cities in Calabria, which issued coins bearing the legend ORRA, and the third, the subject of this chapter, a sea-port town on the coast of Apulia about ten miles north of the promontary of Garganus. The city gave its name to the bay formed by the headland Urias Sinus mentioned by Pomponius Mela (II, 4, § 7).

The city is merely mentioned by Pliny and Ptolemy among the cities of the Daunian Apulians, but no notices of its history can be found in any ancient writers. Strabo just mentions the city (Casaub. 284, lib. VI, c. III, § 9) : "The promontory of Garganum, running into the sea, juts out from this bay about three hundred stadia. As you turn the point you perceive the town of Urium, while off the headland are seen the Diomedean islands. All this coast produces everything in great abundance, it is exceedingly well adapted for horses and sheep, and the wool is finer than that of Tarentum, but less glossy. The district is mild on account of the cup-like situation of the plains. "

The site is at present occupied by a small town called Rodi near the entrance to a salt-water lake or lagoon called Lago di Varano.

A name which is very probably a corruption of Lacus Urianus (Romanelli, vol. II, p. 283).

BRONZE COINS.

The only coins which have been preserved from the Apulian city Hyria are very small bronze, and present only two different types.

I. Size .35. Obv. Head of Pallas to right wearing crested Corinthian helmet : border of dots.

Rev. YPIA / TINΩ. A rudder lengthwise to left; beneath, a dolphin to right, plain border.

II. Size .3. Obv. Head of Zeus to right laureated. YPIA and a thunderbolt.

The Obverse type of no 1 shows the influence of Tarentum to have been great at Hyria for the type is copied from coins of that city. The Reverse type the rudder, is probably emblematic of the sea port; the dolphin may also have been an emblem of the sea (as on the coins of Syracuse) or perhaps of Poseidon.

The rudder was used on gems in a similar manner as an emblem of the sea. In the Stosch collection of gems is one on which Venus is represented leaning on a rudder (πηδάλιον) and there it evidently can only be a reference to her origin from the sea. On another gem is a rudder and a cornucopiae representing the proceeds of sea and land. On one of Bartoli's lamps is a figure of a Triton carrying a rudder on his shoulder and blowing a conch.

conception of the type, the decided characterisation bordering on the rude, which frequently obtrude themselves in his figures; nevertheless the work is full of power and life, and still entirely in the spirit of the Quattrocento. On some of the other medals conjecturally ascribed to this master, that of Girolamo Donato, the Venetian envoy at the Curia, has the greatest evidence of probability in its favour, since it was for Donato that Riccio made in 1492 the five reliefs (still preserved in the Academia at Venice) for the altar in the Church of the Servites in his native city. Less by the portrait, which is somewhat tame for our artist, than by the excellently composed and cast reverse with the figure (difficult, however, to explain) of a handsome youth sleeping, from whom two Cupids are Nous retrouvons ici la plaquette si connue de la Judith, d'après le dessin de Mantegna gravé par Mocetto. L'épreuve de la collection Dreyfus porte la marque rare R°I. La Mise au Tombeau, où tout le groupe central, la Vierge évanouie, soutenue par les saintes femmes, est emprunté à la célèbre estampe de Mantegna; voici encore saint Georges à cheval tuant le Dragon, le Triomphe d'un héros, et la foule des allégories sur la Fortune, la Vertu ou l'Amour. Toute cette dernière série de plaquettes allégoriques ne sont, à la vérité, que des revers de médailles dont les droits sont pour la plupart inconnus, et beaucoup des éléments décoratifs qu'elles renferment se retrouvent dans un des bas-reliefs du tombeau de Della Torre, qui se trouve au musée du Louvre".

The fine Plaques representing the Entombment, St. Jerôme, and a Family of Satyrs reproduced here, are in the celebrated Collection of M. Gustave Dreyfus in Paris, and figured in the January 1908 member of Les Arts.

Institut de France, 1881, 1891 and 1894; Member of the Société de biologie, 1893, and of the Académie de Médecine, 1898; Knight of the Legion of honour, 1903. In 1903 he was named Professor of anatomy at the Ecole nationale des Beaux-Arts, in succession to Mathias Duval, and in 1905, he was admitted a member of the Academie des Beaux-Arts on the death of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild.

His medical works are numerous; the most important being: Etudes cliniques sur l'Hystéro-épilepsie ou grande Hystérie, and L'Art et la Médecine.

At the Salon of 1888, a statue 'Le Moissonneur' was exhibited by him; in 1890, again a bronze statue 'Le premier Artiste', in 1900, 'Un Bûcheron au repos', and in 1903 the 'Pasteur Monument', for the Place Saint-Michel, at Chartres.

Dr E. J. Marey.

As a Medallist, Dr Paul Richer is the author of the following Plaquettes 50 Years' Jubilee of the Société de biologie (1899); —

Dr J. B. A. Chauveau.

Prof. Dr Raphael Blanchard (1900); — Prof. Dr E. J. Marey (1902) (illustrated); — Prof. Dr J. B. A. Chauveau (1903) (illustrated); — B. Teissier, medical student (1904); — International Medical Congress at Lisbon (1909), etc.

The Portrait-plaquette of Dr Chauveau is a remarkable work. Dr Lacronique describes it thus in Gazette numismatique française, 1905, p. 20: "La physionomie si expressive et si imposante de Chauveau est d'une ressemblance parfaite. Cette tête olympienne, où se lit à la fois l'intelligence, la vigueur et la bonté, surmonte un buste puissant dont les épaules sont courbées moins par l'âge que par le travail. Elle est couronnée d'une abondante chevelure dont on ne peut soupçonner, sur la médaille, l'éclatante blancheur, tant la figure est restée celle d'un homme dans tout l'épanouissement d'une verte et forte maturité. — La scène du revers se passe dans le laboratoire physiologique de Chauveau à l'école vétérinaire de Lyon. Les appareils représentés, le dispositif employé, les aides, le cheval en expérience, tout est d'une exactitude absolue. Cet ensemble met en évidence l'ingéniosité et l'originalité que le savant apporta dans ses moyens de recherches, ainsi que le lieu où naquit et grandit sa renommée".

Dr Paul Richer designed the obv. of the official medal of the 15th International Medical Congress at Lisbon in 1906, which was modelled by Simões of Almeida. A specimen was exhibited at the Salon, 1908, with a Medal of the Congress of Lyons, and a Portrait-plaquette of Bénédict Tissier.

RICHERDES, HERMANN (Germ.). Mint-master at Wunstorf, 1568-1569; was imprisoned for issuing false money; but later his initials HR occur on coins of Münden, 1577, proving that he was reinstated at the latter Mint.

NÜRNBERGISCHER VEREIN FÜR MÜNZKUNDE.

Der" Verein für Münzkunde Nürnberg" eröffnete mit seiner sehr gut besuchten Sitzung vom 4. Oktober 1909 die neue Vortragsreihe. Nach der Begrüssung durch den Vorsitzenden und einer Reihe geschäftlicher Mitteilungen wurde die eingelaufene Literatur vorgelegt und kurz besprochen. Hierauf erfolgte die feierliche Uebergabe der silbernen Ehrentafel für 25 jährige Mitgliedschaft an Herrn Fr. Hertlein; das weiter in Betracht kommende Mitglied Herr. F. Rohlederer, der z. Zt. in Westfalen weilt, hatte ein längeres Dank- und Glückwunsch-Telegramm gesandt. — "Die beiden Nürnberger Graveure Dallinger und ihre Medaillen" war das Thema, über welches sodann Herr C. F. Gebert sprach. Unter Vorlage der von A. P. Dallinger und seinem Sohne A. L. Dallinger geschnittenen Denk- und Geldmünzen gab der Vortragende über Entstehung einiger derselben ausführlichere Nachrichten. In der sich anschliessenden sehr lebhaften Debatte, an welcher die Herren Schrag, Dr. Will, Schumann, Zippelius und der Vortragende teilnahmen, kam man auf die bisher so gut wie unbekannte Medaillengeschichte Nürnbergs aus der ersten Hälfte des 19. Jahrhunderts zu sprechen. Es wurde allgemein gewünscht, dass auch das Leben und die Arbeiten Thomas Stettners einer Forschung und Beschreibung unterzogen werden sollten, und das über das Leben und Treiben von Adam Nikolaus Riedner, des sog. letzten Nürnberger Münzmeisters, näheres erforscht werden sollte. Im Hinblick darauf, dass die Stadt Nürnberg das Andenken der beiden Dallinger durch eine nach ihnen benannte Strasse ehrte, schlug Herr Zippelius vor, die Vorstandschaft des Vereins solle dem Magistrat Vorschläge machen, auch andere mit dem Münz- und Medaillenwesen in Verbindung stehende hervorragende Männer auf diese Weise zu ehren. — Herr Dr. Will brachte sodann eine Partie Pfennige aus einem oesterr. Fund zur Vorlage und Besprechung. Weiter berichtete er über die von ihm im Laufe des Sommers besichtigten Münzsammlungen in Salzburg (Museum) und Mailand (Castell). Namentlich letztere muss nach den Mitteilungen des Herrn Redners sowohl durch ihre Reichhaltigkeit als durch ihre Einordnung einen hervorragenden Eindruck machen. In der auch sehr schönen und reichhaltigen Salzbeurger Sammlung fielen dem Herrn Redner die verhältnismässig wenig Mittelaltermünzen auf. In bunter Reihe legten sodann die Herren Kreiselmeyer, Köhler, Perge, Gebert, W. Lauer und A. Müller interessante Geld- und Denkmünzen zur Ansicht und Besprechung vor.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.

Oct. 21. — Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair. — Miss Agnes Baldwin, Mr. Stephen K. Nagg. Mr. Hubert Niklewicz, and M. Michel Sontzo were elected Fellows.

Mr. T. Bliss exhibited five base testoons of Edward VI., including a specimen from the Bristol Mint with Thomas Chamberlain's mint-mark, a specimen countermarked with a greyhound, and two others bearing the portcullis countermark. Mr. Percy H. Webb exhibited an interesting series of second and third brass coins of Carus and Carinus. Mr. F. A. Walters showed four unpublished varieties of the light groat of Henry IV., including a specimen showing a remarkably early type of bust with the name HENRIC punched over RICARD. Mr. J. H. Pinches exhibited a specimen in bronze of the medal presented by the Royal Geographical Society to members of the Antarctic expedition.

Mr. C. T. Seltman read a paper on 'The Coins of Antigonus I. and Demetrius Poliorcetes', in which he proposed a chronological arrangment of their issues. It has hitherto been thought that only staters and tetradrachms, with types and name of Alexander the Great, were struck by Antigonus and Demetrius before the battle of Salamis in 306 B.C. Mr. Seltman described two unique tetradrachms, with the type of Alexander and the names of Antigonus and Demetrius respectively, which, from the absence of the regal title, must have been struck before the battle of Salamis, when Antigonus and his son assumed the tittle of "king". These pieces are of Asiatic, and probably Syrian, make. To the period of the stay of Demetrius in the Peloponnese from 304 B.C. to 301 B.C., when he was recalled to Asia to aid his father, gold staters and tetradrachms with the legends ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΝΤΙΓΟΝΟΥ and ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ and the type of Alexander the Great were ascribed. The last issues of Demetrius cover the period from his seizure of the throne of Macedon in 294 B.C. to his overthrow in 287 B.C.. To this period Mr. Seltman ascribed the series of coins in gold, silver, and copper, with or without portrait, having the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ and reverse types, horseman, Poseidon, Pallas, or a prow.

A paper by Mr. G. F. Hill on 'Two Italian Medals of Englishmen' was also read. The first of these was a medal of Sir John Cheke (1514-57), who is known to have been in Italy in 1555. The medal is clearly the work of a Paduan classicizing artist of the sixteenth century, and from the remarkable similarity of the work to that of Martino da Bergamo's medal of the Paduan jurist Marco Mantova Benovides might be his work. The second medal described was of Richard White (1539-1611) of Basingstoke, made at Padua by the artist Ludovico Leoni, who signed it.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.

Oct. 20. — Mr. Bernard Roth, V. P., in the chair. — H. M. the King of Portugal accepted membership. Messrs C. E. B. Bowles and E. Trustram were elected.

Mr. Carlyon-Britton read an important paper on Anglo-Saxon Mints of Doubtful Identity', in the course of which he rejected a large number of hypothetical attributions and identifications, and, with the assistance of Hauberg's 'Myntforhold og Udmyntninger ..... indtil 1146', cleared the ground of certain Danish and Hiberno-Danish issues which have been allowed to intrude upon the Anglo-Saxon domain. Among the latter were coins which have been erroneously supposed to indicate the existence of mints at Otford and Weybridge. The lecturer pointed out futility of attributing a mint to an obscure place, without knowing its status in A.-S. times, merely because of a superficial similarity between its modern name and its designation before the twelfth century; he insisted upon the need for thorough comparison of the groups of letters on the coins; and he dwelt upon the value of two criteria which should be used concurrently. These were (1) the law of King Athelstan which restricted minting to cities and boroughs; and (2) the occasional note in Domesday Book of the number of burgenses at a given place. The result of the comparison referred to, and of the application of the criteria, rejected the identification as mint-places of Ashdown, Bardney, Castle Rising, Chelsea, Croydon, Darenth, Edington, Greenwich, Harwich, Idbury, Lancaster, Luffwich, Lyminge, Milton, Stanwick, Warmington, Welmesford, and Winchelsea, in so far as the reasons hitherto advanced are concerned. Many of these are marked upon the Numismatic Map of England in vol. ii. of the British Museum Catalogue. ÆSCE was shown to be Hastings; CEAI (CEAF, SCEAF), Shaftesbury; IORT, Hertfort; LANDC, Langport; STANV, Stamford; TOMW, TOMWEORTHIG, Tamworth; WORIME, WORIMEN, Warminster. The following hitherto unidentified mints, namely, ACXEPO, MEONRE, NEWIR, PEDR, PERESC, were respectively located at "Axport" (Axbridge), the Meons, Newark, Petherton, and Pershore. Among towns proved to have been boroughs, and to have possessed mints, were Axport, Darent Port, Milborne Port, Newport Pagnell, and Warminster.

Presentations. — By Mr. L. Forrer, 'The Biographical Dictionary of Medallists', Vol. IV. By Mr. William Sykes, a medal designed by himself and Mr. T. Sheppard to commemorate the conversion of the birthplace of Wilberforce into a Public Museum by the Hull Corporation. By Mr. Sanford Saltus, two of the newly issued United States cents bearing President Lincoln's head, designed by Mr. V. D. Brenner.

Exhibitions. — By Mr. Carlyon-Britton, two unique pennies of Edward the Confessor, bearing the mint-names ON PERESC and ON PEDR respectively. By Mr. S. Bousfield, trial-strikings, proofs, and clichés of naval and military medals from 1746 to 1812. By Mr. A. H. Baldwin, three North-Borneo nickel pieces. By General C. Fagar, a penny of Archbishop Ceolnoth, with profile bust, minted by TOCCA. By Mr. H. Garside, five specimens of the first coinage of the Ottawa branch of the Royal Mint. By Mr. S. H. Hamer, proofs of private tokens, and an Applebee (Oxford) token. By Mr. H. Laver, a British copper coin (type Evans G. 5) found at Colchester.

THE NEW EVANS FAMILY DOLLAR.

New Idea Started by Which Memory May Be Made to Last as Long as Silver—Rear Admiral Evans First.

Through an announcement made yesterday by Frank C. Higgins, President of the New-York Numismatic Club, there is given to all Americans who desire to perpetuate the memory of the achievements of themselves or their ancestors the news that there has been established a system of coinage by the use of which their memory may be made to last as long as a silver coin endures. The first family in the United States to become the possessor of "a family dollar" is the Evans family and the first "family dollar" struck has been sent to Rear Admiral Evans.

The idea which is here applied for the first time in this country is an adaptation of the idea of the denarius used, for instance, by Gaius Allius, who dwelt in Rome B.C. 50, and by many other Romans before and after his time. Realizing that heirlooms like grandfathers' clocks may be destroyed by fire and that family timepieces may fall into unworthy hands, Mr. Higgins, one of whose ancestors was Major William Milnor Evans, who fought in the war of 1812, has designed what he calls the "Evans family dollar." It is the first in a series of "family dollars," or "portrait medals," which will be designed for other families.

The possibilities of the new coinage seem to be boundless. Those persons whose family trees have borne fruit of which the contemporaneous persons are proud may link their own names to the names of the family heroes by having their names engraved on the medal which carries to posterity the record of the virtues of him who has gone before. Each "family dollar" will bear the likeness of the founder of the house and a recital of the principal fields of activity in which his descendants have become best known. The medals are of the size and weight of the United States silver dollar. The space on the reverse which is left for the name of that member of the family who first uses the "family dollar" is large enough to carry an ordinarily long name.

On the obverse of the Evans medal which will be coined for circulation among members of the family appears the figure of Elystan Glodridd, Prince of Radnor and Builth. He is described on the medal as follows:

Called the Illustrious
God-Son of Athelstane, the King of England.
The Defender of Welsh
Privileges in the Tenth Century.
Founder of the Fourth
Royal Dynasty of Wales.
And Ancestor of a Long Line of Nation Builders, Statesmen, Philosophers, Savants,
Military and Naval Heroes, Artists and Literati of the Surname of
EVANS.

On the reverse appears the inscription;

A Direct Descendant of Elystan Glodridd,
Prince of Wales.

Mr. Higgins said last night that there is a peculiar appropriateness in the fact that the Evans family has the first dollar, because a member of that family, the late Sir John Evans, who died recently, had been since 1874 president of the Royal Numismatic Society of Great Britain, with which organization he had been connected since 1854.

THE TRIAL OF THE PYX.

The trial of the Pyx, or testing of the gold and silver coinage manufactured at the Royal (London) Mint, and the branch mints of Sydney, Melbourne, Perth, and Ottawa, was concluded last evening, when satisfactory verdicts regarding the coinage submitted were returned by the jurors. This was the first occasion upon which the coinage of the Canadian Mint has been placed upon trial, and the officials must feel very gratified that their work has successfully undergone the severe and searching ordeal to which it was subjected. During the year ended June 30, 10,400,000 sovereigns and half-sovereigns were coined at the Royal Mint, and the value of the gold coins put into the Pyx was £5,200. The silver coined during the same period amounted in value to £707,356. At Sydney 2,180,000 sovereigns and 232,000 half-sovereigns, at Melbourne 3,098,586 sovereigns and 404,828 half-sovereigns, and at Perth 4,714,960 sovereigns, and 24,655 half-sovereigns were coined during the year ended March 31. 1909, the value of the respective Pyxes being £1,150, £1.675, and £2,367 10s. Only 3,474 sovereigns were coined at Ottawa, of which ten were placed in the Pyx. The total amount of gold coined at the five mints was £20,727,761 10 s., and the value of the five Pyxes £10,402 10s.

The proceedings opened at the Goldsmiths' Hall on June 8, in accordance with the Treasury warrant, dated May 3, ordering a trial of the four Colonial mints on the first date, and of the Royal Mint on July 7 and 8. The King's Remembrancer (J. R. Mellor, Esq., Senior Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature), who now presides at these trials, after having directed Mr. Hance, the chief clerk of his department, to read the warrant, administered the statutory oath to the following freemen of the Goldsmith's Company: — Colonel Robert Williams, M. P., Sir Alfred Dent, Mr. H. F. Bowles, Lord Harrowby, Mr. C. H. Townley, Mr. H. C. Lambert, Sir Boverton Redwood, Mr. J. F. W. Deacon, Mr. Harry Alston, Mr. H. W. Robinson, and Mr. George Pite. He then briefly addressed the jurors, who, having chosen Colonel Williams as their foreman, proceeded to the discharge of their duties.

The following officers of the Royal Mint were present at the trials: — The Deputy-Master, the Right Hon. W. Ellison-Macartney; the Superintendent of the Operative Department, Mr. E. Rigg, I.S.O.; the Chemist and Assayer, Dr. T. K. Rose; the Chief Clerk, Mr. F. L. D. Matthews; and the Staff Clerk, Mr. C. T. Folkerd. Major P. A. MacMahon, F.R.S., the Deputy Warden of the Standards, was in charge of the weights and scales and the gold and silver trial plates supplied by the Board of Trade for use at these trials. Sir Walter Prideaux, the Clerk of the Goldsmiths' Company, represented that body.

At a quarter past 6 last evening the King's Remembrancer attended at the Goldsmiths' Hall to receive the five verdicts, which were afterwards filed in the King's Remembrancer's Department of the Supreme Court.

At 7 o'clock the usual Pyx banquet took place, at which the Prime Warden (Lord Harrowby) and the Wardens (Mr. C. H. Townley, his Honour Judge Lush Wilson, K. C., and Sir John Wolfe-Barry, F.R.S.) of the Goldsmiths' Company entertained the officials and jurors engaged in the trials, together with a large company of guests. Among the latter were the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the President of the Board of Trade, Lord Crewe, Lord Saltoun, Lord Leith, the Deputy-Master of the Mint, the King's Remembrancer, the Hon. Sir Charles Fremantle, Sir Felix Schuster, Sir Edward Strachey, M. P., Sir H. Llewellyn Smith, Mr. G. R. Askwith, K. C., Mr. W. F. Marwood, Major Percy MacMahon, the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman of the Board of Customs, the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, the Governor of the Bank of England, Mr. C. A. Cook (Chief Charity Commissioner), and the Masters and Clerks of many of the principal Livery Companies.

GREEK COINS.

COINS OF MAGNA GRAECIA

LUCERIA

The modern city of Luceria, with about 12000 inhabitants, occupies the site of the ancient Apulian Luceria; it is on a hill of considerable elevation, one of the most easterly spurs of the Apennines, overlooking the fertile plains of Apulia. Of the more ancient native city we know nothing except what may he gathered from the legends related by Strabo (264 or Bk. VI, 1, 14) concerning an image of Minerva, said to have been rescued from the city of Troy, being preserved there, also he says many other things are shewn in these districts as evidence of Diomed's having possessed them. Such were the ancient offerings in the temple at Luceria. Strabo says this ancient city of the Daunii was of no account in his day, that is in the time of Augustus (283 Bk. VI, III, 39). Nothing is really known of Luceria until the period of the Second Samnite War, when the citizens joined the other Apulians in their alliance with Rome, in 326 B.C., and remained faithful to Rome although the other cities broke the treaty, and in consequence the Samnites besieged Luceria.

The Roman legions were on their way to relieve the citizens when they sustained the great disaster at the Caudine Forks in 321 B.C.

There were two roads by which the Romans might approach Luceria, one along the coast, the safer but the longer road, the other led through the dangerous but shorter valley called the Caudine Forks in which the Roman army was taken, and Luceria in consequence fell into the hands of the Samnites.

From Livy we learn (IX, 12) that the Roman knights given as hostages at Caudium were kept in custody at Luceria until 319 B.C., when Publius in a second battle near the same fatal pass defeated the Samnites and caused them to flee into Luceria.

The Samnites prepared to meet Papirius at Luceria when the Tarentines threatened if either party refused to agree to cease the war they would join their arms with the other party against them.

The Samnites in Luceria tried to favour the Tarentines and refused to come out to fight. Their camp was taken by the Romans in 319 B.C. but the men were not destroyed for fear lest the hostages in Luceria should be slain.

The Samnites in the city were reduced so low by famine that they sent ambassadors to Papirius proposing that he should raise the siege on receiving the hostages. The Roman consul told them to leave within the walls their arms and baggage and pass under the yoke as they had made the Romans pass at Caudium. All the standards and arms which the Romans had lost at Caudium were recovered, as well as the hostages.

As Canusium is connected in our minds with the defeat at Caunae, so is Luceria with that at the Caudine Forks.

A truce was made with the Samnites from 318-317 B.C. but in the next year the Samnites reopened the war. In 314 or 313 B.C. Luceria again fell into the hands of the Samnites, the Roman garrison being betrayed to the enemy. But the Roman army was not far off, and the city was retaken at the first onset. The Lucerians and Samnites to a man were put to the sword.

The Senate were consulted as to sending a colony to Luceria, but such was the resentment felt in Rome at their treachery, that many voted for its demolition. However, two thousand five hundred colonists were sent to the place.

"Fearing to lose all Apulia, the Romans sent a colony to Luceria, one of the most celebrated cities of the land, in order that it might serve them as a base from which to continue their war against the Samnites" (Diodorus Sic. Bk. XIX, Ch. 72).

Twenty years after, in the year 294 B.C. the Samnites again laid siege to Luceria, when the Roman Consul Atilius advanced to its relief and defeated his enemies in a great battle.

During the Second Punic War, 218-201 B.C. Luceria was one of the most important military positions of the Romans, and was especially used as their winter-quarters. Although the citizens suffered much Luceria was nevertheless one of the eighteen Latin colonies which in 209 B.C. expressed their readiness to continue their contributions both of men and money, and which in consequence received the thanks of the Senate for their fidelity (Livy, XXVII, 10).

In Cicero's time Luceria was still one of the most considerable towns in Apulia. As Pliny calls it a "colonia", it probably received a fresh colony under Augustus.

The coinage of Luceria may be divided into three series, the first consisting of cast aes grave of the libral system, issued between 314-250 B.C. Although these are practically Roman coins, some of the types, as the heads of Heracles and Apollo, the head of a horse, a horse prancing, with a star above, a cock, a dolphin, the ear of corn, or the cockle-shell, all show the influence of the Apulians and Tarentines.

The second series consists of cast aes grave of the triental system issued after 250 B.C. The types of these are similar to those of the first series, but with the addition of the letter 𐌋 on the Reverse.

The third series consists of struck coins of the sextantal system, and were issued before 217 B.C. The types bear the heads of Pallas, Heracles, Poseidon, Demeter, Apollo, the Dioskuri, and Artemis.

In addition to these autonomous coins of Luceria there is another series of Roman coins both of silver and copper with the inscription ROMA, and the mint-mark 𐌋 of Luceria, which we may call Romano-Lucerian.

MATEOLA.

The village now called Matera is supposed to be the site of the ancient city Mateola, which was important enough to coin bronze money between 250-217 B.C. Matera is twelve miles from Genusium, and about eight miles east of the river Bradanus. It was near or on the Via Appia, about forty miles south east of Venusia, and about the same distance from Tarentum.

Pliny seems to be the only ancient author who mentions this city, but from the expression used by him "ex Gargano Mateolani" we should hardly have expected to find the site in the south west corner of Apulia about eighty miles from the promontory of Garganus.

The coins consist of Sextantes and Unciae only, issued probably between 250 and 217 B.C.

I. Sextans. Size 65. Obv. Head of Pallas to right wearing crested Corinthian helmet and earring; above, oo: border of dots.

NEAPOLIS OF APULIA.

This city, unmentioned by any ancient writer, is situated on the coast of the Adriatic about twenty miles south of Barium, and about fourteen north of Ignatia on the road afterwards called Via Trajana. It was about thirty-eight miles almost due north of Tarentum.

The place is now called Polignano, near which, town numerous relics of antiquity have been discovered (Romanelli, vol. II, p. 148-152; Millingen, Numism. de l'Italie, p. 147).

The attribution of the coins bearing NEAΠ rests upon the evidence of numerous finds. From their style they appear to have been issued at about 300 B.C.

BRONZE COINS OF THE APULIAN NEAPOLIS

Circa 300 B.C.

I. Size .7. Obv. Head of Dionysos.

Rev. NEAΠ. Vine branch and grapes.

Rev. NE on left of an ear of barley with two leaves, AΠO on right: plain border.

III. Size .5. Obv. Female head to right, wearing stephanos.

Rev. NEA / ΠOV. An ornamented trident.

RUBI.

Rubi is interesting to numismatists as being one of the few cities of Apulia which issued silver coins.

They consist of Diobols and Obols, or Nummi, and half Nummi. Five different types of bronze coins are also known. The city Rubi now called Ruvo is distant from Canusium about twenty eight miles towards the south east, and is about ten miles west of Bituntum.

Its site is on the hills overlooking the rich plain along the sea coast, from which it was about ten miles distant.

Rubi is mentioned by Horace as one of the places at which Maecenas and his friends stopped on their journey from Rome to Brundusium (Horace, Sat. I, 5, 94); on leaving Canusium he says "Inde Rubos fessi pervenimus" but makes no remarks upon this halting place.

Numerous works of Greek art in bronze and terra-cotta have been found in the excavations made there, as well as great numbers of painted vases of great variety and beauty, but they are, like those of all the other cities of Apulia, inferior to those of Nola and the Campanian cities.

These treasures are described by Romanelli (vol. II, p. 172) and in the Bollett. dell' Institut. Arch., 1829 and 1834).

Neither Strabo nor Ptolemy mentioned Rubi, but Pliny speaks of the citizens as "Rubustini" and this ethnic form is confirmed by the legend found on some of the coins PYBAΣTEINΩN.

The coins give evidence of the great influence of the Greek colonists of Tarentum, and are in harmony with what we should expect from the treasures of Greek art found on the site.

Rev. Female figure to left, holding patera and cornucopiae : plain border.

RUBI AND SILVIUM.

There is a silver coin bearing on the Reverse ΣΙ ΡΥ, which has been interpreted as a coin showing the intimate relationship existing between the towns of Rubi and Silvium. This latter city is situated about twenty-two miles south-west of Rubi, and about twenty south of Venusia on the Appian Way. It was near the border between Apulia and Lucania, and was noticed by Strabo as the frontier town of the Peucetii (Bk. VI, p. 28). It is just mentioned by Pliny (III, 11). Diodorus Siculus says that the Roman Consuls made their camp here, besieged the city and took it by assault, with much booty, making five thousand men prisoners in the year that the Samnites took Sora and Atia (Diodorus, Sic.. XX, ch. 80; Pratelli, Via Appia, IV, 6, p. 478; Romanelli, vol. II, p. 188).

Circa 300-250 B.C.

ERRATA

Supra (col. 11772) RICHARD, J. J. Brother of L. Richard, q. v. Both well-known Founders. The only medal executed by J. J. Richard is that of General Foy, a most brilliant French orator, whe knew how to "put his heart into his words". Hence on the reverse of the medal is a heart and a tongue with ears all round listening. A specimen exists in the British Museum (from Dr F. Parkes Weber's collection).

Louis Richard was a personal friend of David d'Angers, and usually cast his medallions for him, at least during the life of the great artist. Some of David d'Angers' medallions bear Richard's name on the back. L. Richard was the father-in-law of Ferdinand Liard, who cast the medallions for so many artists (including Prof. A. Legros). He died some years ago.

A son of Ferd. Liard is A. Liard, one of the cleverest medal-casters of modern times.

RICHIER, JACOB (French). Sculptor, born at Saint-Mihiel, Lorraine, in 1585, settled first at Vizille, and later at Grenoble, where he married in 1615. He was in the service of the Duc de Lesdiguières for whom he executed numerous works of sculpture. His signature I.R.F. 1613 occurs on a Portrait-medallion of Marie de Vignon, Marquise de Treffort, which is reproduced by Mazerolle, Pl. XXXVII, n° 759.

Marie de Vignon, Marquise de Treffort.

The date of this artist's activity is placed between 1610 and 1641, but the year of his death is not known.

(68 × 52 mill.; lead in Epinal Museum).

Jean Richier was a grandson of the famous Ligier Richier, the sculptor of the Saint Mihiel sepulchre. His medallions, says Mazerolle, have a certain artistic merit and are of a fairly good style.

RICHMOND, FRANCES STEWART, DUCHESS OF. Vide JAN ROETTIER infra. The figure of Britannia on Charles II.'s Halfpennies and Farthings, from 1668, is said to be a portrait of the famous mistress of the 'merry monarch'.

Frances Stewart, Duchess of Richmond (after Sir Peter Lely).

RICHMOND, DOWAGER DUCHESS OF (Brit.) On 11. July 1626 a patent was granted for seventeen years to the Dowager Duchess of Richmond, and Sir Francis Crane, to issue Farthing tokens, which are usually known as 'Richmond Farthings'. The obv. type is a Crown over two sceptres in saltire and ℞. crowned harp. Numerous varieties exist, differing principally in the disposition and contraction of the legends and sizes of crown and harp. Montagu specifies fifty-five different mint-marks which he had noted on them.

RICHMOND, W. B. (Brit.). Contemporary Sculptor, Painter, and Medallist; son of the painter George Richmond; Associate of the Royal Academy; a pupil of Prof. Legros and E. J. Poynter. He has executed some clever Portrait-medallions, modelled in wax first, and cast in bronze.

RICHOU, HENRI LOUIS (French). Contemporary Sculptor, born at Seine-Port; pupil of C. Monceau and A. Dumont. At the Salon of 1892 he exhibited a Portrait-medallion of M^me^ Alice Richou.

RICHTHAUSEN, JOHANN CONRAD, FREIHERR VON CHAOS (Austr.). Mint-master at Vienna, 1646-1659. His mint-mark occurs on Æ 10, 2 and 1 Ducats; Æ. Double Thalers, Thalers, Half-Thalers, and subsidiary coinage of Ferdinand III. Before being appointed at Vienna, he appears to have served in the same capacity at Brünn. He died on 25. July 1663.

RICHTER, BENEDIKT or BENGT (Swed.). Medallist, born at Stockholm in 1670, died at Vienna on 18. April 1735. He was a pupil and son-in-law of Karlsteen, and after leaving Sweden he worked for some time in Paris, where he was employed at the Medal Mint to engrave medals for Louis XIV. In 1703 he came over to England, but soon after returned to Stockholm, being appointed Engraver at the Royal Mint there. In 1712 he was called to Vienna to fill the post of chief Medallist (Obermedailleur) to the Imperial Mint, and on 15. January 1715 he was named Inspector of the coinage (K. Münzpräginspector). It would appear, from documents, that the artist also spent some years at Berlin, about 1710-1712.

Among this Medallist's productions I have come across the following, which are variously signed : RICHTER; — R.; — R; — Richter; — BR.; — B. R.: — Unknown Portrait, undated, and uniface 69 mill.; — Charles XII.'s defeat of King Augustus of Saxony, near Riga, 9. July, 1701; — Peace of Alt-Ranstadt between Charles XII. and Augustus, 14. Hercules; — Admiral Sir George and Lady Rooke, 1703; — Sir William Rich, 1703; — Richard Nevill, 1703. (The last three medals were executed by Richter for the Swedish Club in London. "The head of each person," says Vertue, "was done on one side [of the medal] and some motto and device on the other. These were done by Bengt Richter, a Sweed, who first modelled them by the life, and cast and repaired them curiously. He was related to [Christian Richter], the limner, but staid not long in England"); — Arrival of Emperor Charles VI. from Spain for his Coronation in Germany, 1711; — Coronation of Charles VI., 1711 (sev. var.); — Charles VI. and Empress Elizabeth Christina, 1711; — Hungarian Coronation of Charles VI., 1712; — Preliminaries of Peace signed between Prince Eugene and Villars, and Peace of Rastadt, 1714; — Hungarian Coronation of Empress Elizabeth Christina, 1714 (℞. by Warou); — Another, with CORON. Daniel Warou, who was likewise a pupil of Karlsten, and who cut some dies of medals in conjunction with Bengt Richter, appears to me, from his work, especially that connected with the Imperial House of Germany, to have been the better artist of the two, although some of the latter's productions are not without much merit.

RIEDTSCHAL, GEORG (Austr.). Mint-engraver at Kuttenberg, 1627.

RIEGER, HANS (Germ.). Two Medallists and Coin-engravers of that name were working at Breslau during the first three quarters of the seventeenth century. The father, son of Georg Rieger, cutter of armorial bearings, was born in 1580 and died on 15. March 1653, and the son was still living in 1660. About 1621 and following years Hans Rieger Senr was Mint-master at Breslau. His initials occur, in that capacity, on a number of coins, which he however may also have engraved. One of his best known works, which is signed: HANS RIEGER, is the Broad Schauthaler commemorating the Pest of 1633. The Half Schauthaler only bears his initials H. R.

The Riegers worked not only for the Mint of Breslau, but also for the Kings of Poland, the Princes of Liegnitz-Brieg, etc. The elder Rieger produced a considerable number of coins and medals, beginning with a Double Ducat of 1611 on the Visit of Emperor Mathias to Breslau, and ending with a Portrait-medal of Prince Ludwig von Liegnitz-Brieg, 1647.

Mathias Ries worked for many years at Rome, where he executed a number of intaglios, after antique statuary. His series of Portraits is also characteristic. Nagler mentions a Portrait-intaglio, cut in a carnelian of thaler size, of Prince Elector Johann Wilhelm von der Pfalz; also a Bacchus, cut in carnelian, which eventually went to Sweden, and is of excellent workmanship. After his death a series of plaster casts of his gems was issued, about 1740.

In 1883 he obtained a Mention honorable ; in 1888 a medal of the Third class, and a Silver Medal at the Universal Exhibition of 1889.

Ringel d'Illzach, by himself.

In the spring of 1906 I had the pleasure of seing the eminent artist at work in his studio at Strassburg, and was very much impressed by his skill.

This artist is the author of two series of singularly boldly modelled Portrait-medallions, of eminent Frenchmen of 140 mill. in diameter. Each Portrait is accompanied with attributes, inscriptions, or emblems relating to the intellectual influence exercised on contemporaneous history by each of the individuals that are represented

This series of Medallions was published by J. Rouam, Librairie de l'Art, Paris. Among these I have noted the following Portraits : M. E. Chevreul, 1895 ; — Ferdinand de Lesseps ; — Dr J. A. d'Arsonval, of Paris (145 mill.) ; — Emile Augier ; — Jean Dollfus ; — Léon Gambetta ; — Eugène Guillaume ; — Auguste Rodin ; — Victor Hugo ; — Ferdinand de Lesseps ; — Léon Lhermite ; — Louis Pasteur ; — Ernest Renan ; — Jules Grévy ; — Savorgnan de Brazza ; — Alexandre Dumas fils ; — Falguière ; — E. de Goncourt ; — Charles Gounod ; — Etienne Arago ; — Got ; — Ludovic Halévy ; — Labiche ; — General Pittié ; — Francisque Sarcey ; — Aug. M. Ringel d'Illzach, so successful in practising the art of ceramic work, is also one of the most excellent sculptors of our time. His strong individuality marks him out as a Master of a school, around whom gravitate an imposing group of pupils of whom many to-day can also boast of celebrity.

In Gazette numismatique française, 1803, p. 96, M. Jean de Foville makes the following observations on the style of this artist : « Je ne veux pas passer sous silence la série de portraits de M. Ringel d'Illzach. Connu surtout par des bustes de cire peinte d'une conception toujours originale, M. Ringel d'Illzach expose cette année des médaillons qui rappellent ceux de David d'Angers. La plupart sont des portraits d'artistes ; les musiciens y sont en majorité. Ennemi de l'art trop minutieux, l'auteur a surtout cherché l'accent. Il souligne dans chaque physionomie le trait vraiment caractéristique et traite l'ensemble d'une touche très large. Cette méthode difficile est la vraie. Si M. Ringel d'Illzach n'est pas toujours égal à lui-même, il est souvent très évocateur, et il n'est jamais banal. Il était connu comme statuaire : il faut désormais se souvenir de lui comme médailleur » (La Gravure en médaille aux Salons de 1903).

Several of Rivet's medals are exhibited at the Luxembourg Museum.

Rivet has also done good work in ceramic art and in plate. He is a keen observer and lover of nature, and at the same time a thinker with broad ideas, a conscientious and sincere artist. His knowledge and experience enable him to distinguish between essentials and matters of second importance, and his works in consequence do not suffer from ill-balance or lack of proportions.

Nov. 4. 1909.

The Editors of the Numismatic Circular.

Dear Sirs,

I do not know whether the following passage from Coronelli's Isolario (Venice, 1696, p. 271), relating to a supposed Venetian coinage for the island of Chios, has attracted the attention of numismatists: —

"Spendono anco attualmente i Scioti il Zecchino d'oro stampato da'Veneti nel tempo che furono altre volte Padroni di questa Città, il quale dal corrente da Venetia differisce per alcune littere greche, scolpite all'intorno ".

I may add that the only period at which the Venetians are known to have held Chios is 1694-5, and that this occupation is not mentioned in Coronelli's text, which was presumably prepared earlier. Are we then to understand that the sequins with Venetian types struck in the island by the Genoese were still circulating, or some varieties of the ' Oriental ' Venetian sequin bearing the name of Andrea Dandolo and blundered legends?

Yours faithfully,
F. W. Hasluck.

NUMISMATIC SOCIETIES, MUSEUMS, &c.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.

Nov. 21. — Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair. — Col. J. Biddulph and Mr. F. Voysey Peterson were elected Fellows.

Mr. F. A. Walters exhibited a groat of the second coinage of Henry VII. with mint-marks, a greyhound's head on the obverse, and the very rare rose on the reverse. Lady Evans exhibited a specimen in bronze of the Hudson Fulton anniversary medal recently issued by the Circle of Friends of the Medallion. Mr. Horace W. Monckton showed a one-bajocco piece of the " Roman Republic, " cast at Ancona in 1849; and a bronze admission ticket to the Botanic Gardens of Amsterdam, dated 1684. Mr. Percy H. Webb exhibited two Roman bronze coins in fine condition : one struck by P. Canidius Crassus in Egypt in 31 B.C., and the other struck by Q. Oppius, one of Julius Cæsar's prefects in the East, about 45 B.C.

Prof. C. Oman read a paper on the ' Fifth-Century Coins of Corinth ', which he arranged chronologically in nine classes. In Class I. were placed the latest issues of the Archaic Series, characterized by the letter koppa on both sides. The pieces of transitional fabric formed the next three classes. In the first of these (451-448 B.C.) the archaic Pallas head disappears, and is replaced by a severe head of almost masculine type in an incuse square; the second transitional series (448-440 B. C.) is marked by the trident symbol on the obverse, the disappearance of the incuse square, and the introduction of a more elegant Pegasus; the last transitional series (440-433 B. C.) has no symbols on the reverse, and is marked by the introduction of the neckguard on the helmet of Pallas. In Class V. (433-431 B.C.) Prof. Oman placed several rare coins having a murex shell as symbol on the obverse, and in Class VI. (431-414 B.C.) those with the palmette symbol. In Classes V. and VI. appears the modern straight-winged Pegasus. Class VII (414-412 B.C.) contains the interesting series having a circle of dolphins around the head of Pallas, which undoubtedly commemorates the Syracusan alliance of 414 B.C., as the circle of dolphins, which had long appeared on Syracusan coins, was unknown in Greece proper. To the period 411-404 B.C. was allotted the class having the symbols palmette and dolphin on the reverse. Class IX. (404-394 B.C.) is distinguished by the dolphin on the reverse and varying annual symbols. Prof. Oman also discussed the position of the small series of staters having as obverse type Pegasus standing tied up to a large ring, and proposed to place them about 421-414 B.C. suggesting that the type was emblematic of the peace of Nicias in 421 B.C.

OBITUARY

The following notices, although somewhat belated, have been kindly sent for insertion in this column by our friend Mr. Garside, and will no doubt be perused with interest by our readers.

MR. T. W. MINTON.

Mr. Thomas William Minton died at his residence, Chase Ridings, Enfield, Middlesex, on Monday, September 23rd 1907. He was the eldest son of the Rev. Samuel Minton, and was born in the year 1844. He was the first chairman of the famous firm of Minton's Limited, Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire, and was for over thirty years associated with his brother Herbert in the development of the works founded by their great grandfather. Mr. T. W. Minton was a former Mayor of Stoke-on-Trent, president of the Borough Conservative Association, a magistrate for Staffordshire, and captain of the Stoke-on-Trent Rifle Volunteers. On the occasion of Queen Victoria's Jubilee in 1887 he had the honour of presenting personally to Her Majesty a fine vase as the firm's jubilee gift. This the work of a well-known artist, M. Solon, bore upon it illustrations of all the leading events of the reign. Mr. Minton was also brought through business into personal contact with the Prince Consort, the Emperor Napoleon the Third, the Shah of Persia, and King Edward the Seventh, when Prince of Wales. An enthusiastic numismatist, he compiled a voluminous list of numismatic works of all countries. It contained 13.000 entries, and an index with nearly 3.000 names. The work was so bulky that no publisher could be found to undertake its printing, and he presented the manuscript to the Trustees of the British Museum, London, where it is accessible to students. He was formerly a Member of the Numismatic Society of London.

MR. W. ROME.

Mr. William Rome died at his residence, Creek-sea Place, Burnham-on-Crouch, Essex, on Sunday. October 20th 1907. He was born in the year 1842, and entered the Court of Common Council of the City of London as a representive of the ward of Farringdon Within in 1881, and was annually re-elected. In 1906 he was appointed Deputy-Alderman of the ward. He filled the chair of many important committees of the Corporation, and it was mainly at his instance that the loan collections of works of art were periodically held in the Guildhall. For their collection and arrangement, he visited foreign countries and helped in many ways. He was a Fellow of the Royal Numismatic Society, and once possessed a large collection of coins and medals which were sold by auction in London, in February, 1904. He was a Past-Master of the Painter Stainers' Company and one of His Majesty's Lieutenants for the City, and a magistrate for the county of Essex. In trade he was the head of the old-established City of London restaurant businesses carried on under the name of " Sweeting's ". He was a Knight Commander of the Order of Isabella the Catholic, which the King of Spain conferred upon him after the Spanish Art Exhibition in the City of London. Mr. Rome was buried in Burnham-on-Crouch Cemetery on Friday, October 25th 1907.

COLONEL A. W. BAIRD.

Colonel Andrew Wilson Baird died suddenly at 23, Bentinck-street, London, W., on Thusday, April 2nd, 1908. He was born in the year 1843, and entered the Corps of Royal Engineers in 1861. He served through the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 as traffic manager of the railway, for which service he received a medal and was mentioned in despatches. He then joined the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, and was selected to organize and carry out the tidal observations round the coasts of India and Burma. In 1881 he was sent as one of the delegates from India to the Geographical Congress at Venice. In 1885 he was appointed Master of the Calcutta Mint, and held that post until his retirement in 1898. For his services in connection with tidal research, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885. MR. G. C. YATES.

Mr. George Charles Yates died at his residence, Holmfield, Heaton, near Manchester, on Thursday, December 3rd, 1908. He was born in Manchester in the year 1835. For many years he held as lecturer for the Working Men's Clubs Association, for ten years he served the Scientific Students' Association as its honorary secretary, and of the Lancashire and Cheshire Antiquarian Society he was the founder, and was the honorary secretary from the date of inauguration till his death, and when the society celebrated its coming of age a few years ago, he received an illuminated address of congratulation and appreciation of his indefatigable services. In connection with the Antiquarian Society an Old Manchester Museum is in process of formation as a permanent local institution, to this effort Mr. Yates, as secretary of the Committee, devoted himself with characteristic zeal. At his home he possessed one of the finest private museums in the country, the harvest of his long labours as an ardent collector of curios. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, London, in January, 1872, and was a Member of the British Numismatic Society. On completing his fifty years' service as Chief Clerk of the Salford County Court, in 1904, the event was marked by the presentation to Mr. Yates of a silver salver, Judge Parry acting as the spokesman for the officials. Mr. Yates was buried in Swinton Cemetery, near Manchester, on Monday, December 7th 1908.

REVIEWS.

The Coins of Magna Græcia. By the Rev. A. W. Hands. London, Spink & Son Ltd. 1909.

Although two years have elapsed since we welcomed the publication in bookform of the Rev. A. W. Hands' interesting notes on the coin-types of Greece, yet the readers who awaited the publication of the second series of articles, — those dealing with the coinage of the Greek cities in Italy — will find the delay amply justified in the work now under notice.

Although its predecessor showed itself to be the result of careless study, "The Coins of Magna Græcia" far surpasses it. Readers have but to glance at the leaves haphazard to see what a wealth of patient study has been bestowed upon the present work, so that the author should succeed, as he certainly has succeeded, in placing in the student's hand a bunch of golden keys, which unlock the great storehouse of the world's past.

No work existed in the English language previously to the present publication which collected into such pleasant narrative the history, chronology and mythology of the daughter-cities of Greece. Mr. Hands has placed on record an unsurpassed standard of references which will guide every beginner through the great wilderness of literature.

As the author explained in his first volume, a coin is not merely a metal disc, not merely a work of art, but an index, if rightly read, of the social and political life and of the religion of the age to which it belongs.

No words of ours can adequately express the value and interest of the work, and the best we can do is to urge all interested to read it. The arrangement is simple and complete. Around each city are grouped in order of their foundation all the daughter-cities and off-shoots. The text is amplified by the numerous illustrations which are of the high quality one expects and always finds in the books of Messrs Spink's publishing house.

We cannot close this brief survey without a word in reference to the chapter on Weight Standards (pp. 301-319). Here Mr. Hands has thoroughly analysed the various standards, and such a brief, concise and complete account is not to be found elsewhere. The results of this analysis have been depicted in the form of a chart — which is an interesting and original feature of the book.

We are convinced that "the Coins of Magna Græcia" will be assigned its place in the standard numismatic literature of England, and have no hesitation in predicting for it the full realisation of its much-merited success.

Un dictionnaire simple, précis et d'une érudition agréable, je dirai presque de lecture plaisante, ayant pour thème un sujet que l'érudition analytique a renfermé dans le cercle restreint des spécialistes, est une œuvre extrêmement utile : notre collaborateur, M Forrer, spécialiste consciencieux et homme de goût, nous donne un nouveau volume de cet excellent résumé des œuvres du médailleur, du graveur de coins, du fondeur et ciseleur de plaquettes et du litoglyphe, depuis une époque reculée jusqu'à nos jours.

M. Forrer est un travailleur, un numismate érudit ; il a le sentiment de l'art et ce qui n'est pas toujours facile, il sait exprimer sa pensée clairement et sans longueurs. Son ouvrage sera précieux à tous, aux numismates comme aux artistes, et nous ne pouvons que le féliciter d'avoir entrepris une œuvre qui s'imposait depuis longtemps, mais dont l'exécution difficile faisait reculer les plus courageux.

... Mi trovo davvero in dovere di citare l'opera del Forrer come unica e completa nel suo genere, e tributargli quel merito che davvero ognuno deve riconoscergli. COINS OF MAGNA GRAECIA

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS.

(The Coinage of the Greek Colonies of Southern Italy).

1. Vol., 8vo, paper covers, 336 pp., with numerous illustrations in the text, one Map and a Chart.

" The Coins of Magna Græcia " contains information that certainly cannot be found elsewhere in English. A great deal more has been done than a mere digest of Sambon, Evans, and Lenormant, — there is plenty of independe t work. English Collectors of Greek coins ought to be very grateful for the collection of so much good material, and most especially for the arrangement of everything in chronological periods, which are so much more satisfactory than the system of the volume on Italy of the British Museum Catalogue, the only volume that was accessible hitherto. ".

SALAPIA.

About five miles north of the river Aufidus the lagoon called the Palus Salapia extends for twelve miles along the coast of the Adriatic, separated from the open sea by a narrow tongue of land. The old city of Salapia, built upon the shores of the lagoon about twelve miles north of Canusium, was one of the most important of the cities of Apulia. It is probable that in the days of its prosperity there was an outlet from the lagoon to the sea large enough for the passage of ships, as Salapia was spoken of as a considerable sea-port.

Strabo tells us it was the port of the Argyrippi and of the Canusians (lib. VI, p. 284).

According to Vitruvius tradition ascribed its foundation as well as that of Canusium and Arpi to Diomedes (lib. I, 4, 12).

Lycophron seems to assign its origin to the Trojans, though the passage is somewhat obscure (Lycophron Alex. 1129).

There is no trace of a Greek Colony having settled here, but as in the other Apulian cities, the Greek influence of the Tarentines was considerably felt. Extensive ruins of the city are still visible on the western shore of the lagoon in a tract of country now almost wholly desolate, and the coins of Salapia are frequently found on the spot.

It is probable that the salt-works still existing near the artificial mouth of the lagoon are on the same site as the ancient ones and that the name Salapia itself is derived from sal, the lagoon having been always well adopted for the collection of salt.

Our earliest historical notices of the city relate to the period of the Second Punic War, in which it bore a considerable part, Livy (Bk, XXIV, ch. xx) says that on reaching Salapia on his way from Tarentum, Hannibal, as mid-summer was passed, and he liked the place for winter-quarters, collected stores of corn from the country round Metapontum and Heraclæa and his raiders collected herds of horses from the Apulians, and distributed them among his cavalry. This was in 213-214 B.C. In the next year Hannibal took Tarentum.

In the year 210 B.C. Salapia was by treachery given into the hands of the Romans. The story is fully told by Livy (XXVI, 38) who relates how the two principal men of the city Dasius and Blasius or Blattius quarrelled, and after much argument agreed to give up the city to the Romans.

The cavalry of Hannibal in the city however fought bravely, not more than fifty of them falling alive into the hands of the Romans. The loss of his cavalry was more serious to Hannibal than that of the city.

After the death of Marcellus, who had surprised the city, Hannibal tried to take it again by strategy, but the fraud was discovered, and the Carthaginians repulsed with great loss.

Livy tells the story with his usual vividness (XXVII, 1, 78). Salapia does not appear to be mentioned again in history until the time of the Social war, and probably remained in the hands of the Romans until that time.

The ancient city was deserted on account of malaria, we do not know when, and a new town built near the sea-shore. The fate of this city illustrates the effect of malaria on the decline of the Greek cities, a subject which has received considerable attention during this last year.

It would seem from the occurrence of the two names Dasius and Pyllus on the coins of both Arpi and Salapia, that the two cities were perhaps united, not only commercially but politically, during the years that these officers were in power.

The coins of Salapia are all of bronze, and one of the types is common to both cities, that struck in Arpi bearing the name ΔΑΙΟΥ, that struck in Salapia being without the name of a magistrate.

SAMADI.

No mention of this city has been found in any ancient writer, and the name is now unknown in Apulia, to which region the small brass coins bearing this name evidently belong. Two specimens are to be seen in the British Museum, and others are preserved in the Museum at Berlin.

Until the year 1868 these coins were attributed to a city of Pisidia called Sandalium, but from the fabric and the types it is now generally recognized that they cannot have been issued in Pisidia.

In 1868 Mr. Friedländer wrote an article in which he showed that the types were certainly Apulian, and he noticed that on one specimen, procured from Naples, the letter Δ in the legend was in shape D, shewing the influence of Italy most clearly.

The legends on the two coins on the British Museum unmistakably bear the Greek form of the letter Δ.

In the Engadine some of the villages bear names which are derived from those of cities in Southern Italy, such as Lavin, Ardetz, Velthurus, Brixens, Anagni, Fondo, Salurn, Sarntein, and Samaden. It seems therefore very probable that we have, in this Engadine Samaden, a witness to the existence of an Apulian city which is otherwise unknown to us, except by the evidence of the few small bronze coins which may be seen in our Museums.

The two coins in our British Museum each bear the same types, and differ only in size; one is ·6 and the other ·5 of an inch.

Obv. A head of Pallas wearing a Corinthian helmet, to right.

Rev. Four crescents placed back to back with the letters ΣΑΜΑΔΙ between the horns of the crescents.

The attribution of the coins to Apulia was first made in the "Berliner Blätter fur Munz- Siegel- und Wappenkunde. IV Band, p. 138, 1868.

These coins are very similar to those issued at Caelia bearing three crescents which were described by Mr. S. Birch in the Numismatic Chronicle, vol. IV, p. 127.

Crescents are also found on coins of Rubi on which we find two.

On the coins of Venusia also a crescent is seen on the Sesuncia, and three crescents on larger coins of uncertain denomination :

All attempts to find even a remote and little known village in Apulia bearing a name which could possibly be derived from Samadi have hitherto been in vain.

TEATE.

This extremely interesting Bronze coin passed from the Strozzi sale to the British Museum, and therefore does not appears in the old Catalogue. It is a specimen of the coinage of the town before the Roman occupation.

The alphabet used on the legend is that of the old Latin form, is retrograde and to be read from the centre of the coin.

ИVITAIIT (Tiiatium).

Its style is that of about the year 300 B.C. and the type is very similar to that of a coin issued in Cales in 280 B.C. with the legend CAЧENO. The distance between the two cities is about 70 miles, Cales being south west of Teate. The similarity of type probably signifies some connection between the two cities.

The bull type is more likely to have been copied by the citizens of Teate than by those of Cales.

The mother-city of the tribe called the Marrucini was situated on a hill about three miles from the river Aternus, which flows into the Adriatic sea about eight miles from the city. Teate is the most northern of all the Apulian cities whose coins we possess : it was sixty five miles north of Teanum and about ninety from Rome.

The Marrucini, Sabines by race, were connected with the Marsi and were also generally in alliance with the Vestini and Pelligni.

In the year 311 B.C. when M. Valerius and P. Decius were consuls, Diodorus of Sicily tells us that the Romans directed great bodies of infantry and cavalry upon Pollitium a town of the Marrucini (liber XIX, c. cv).

Perhaps Pallanum or Peltuinum may be meant by "Pollitium", both these cities were near Teate.

In 307 B.C. we learn from Livy that "Fabius having marched to Nuceria rejected the application of the people of Alfaterna who then sued for peace. A battle was fought with the Samnites; the enemy were overcome without much difficulty : nor would the memory of that engagement have been preserved, except that in it the Marsians first appeared in arms against the Romans. The Pelignians, imitating the defection of the Marsians, met the same fate" (IX, 41). Livy also tells us how in the year 303 B.C. after the defeat of the Æqui the Marrucini, Marsi, Pelignani, and Trentani warned by the example of the defeat of the Æqui sent orators to Rome seeking peace and friendship (IX, 45). From that time the Marrucini continued faithful to Rome although Livy recounts how in 217 B.C. Hannibal devastated their lands and the contiguous region of Apulia round Arpi and Luceria (XXII, 9). Again in 211 B.C. Hannibal passed through their land (XXVI, 11).

Teate was called "great", and "illustrious" by Silius Italicus who represents Sidicinus collecting the men of Cales with the youthful army of the Vestini, and the Marrucini, the Trentani, and the men of Corpinum, and of the great Teate (liber VIII, 520 seq.).

In another passage Silius describes a combat between a leader named Herius, and Hannibal.

> .....cui nobile nomen
> Marrucina domus, clarumque Teate ferebat.

Herius was a name afterwards known to Livy, and Velleius Paterculus, as belonging to the Asinia gens, but the Herius they mention cannot be the same as the leader spoken of by Silius, and perhaps the poet invented the story and applied an old name known to belong to Teate.

The importance of Teate is proved by the ruins and inscriptions remaining to this day.

It was a municipium under the Romans, but in the earlier times, when under native rule, it was the only great city of the Marrucini.

The modern name of Teate is Chieti and it still flourishes with over 14,000 inhabitants. Among the remains of the ancient city are those of a theatre, a reservoir for water, and two temples, now turned into churches, one of which was erected by Vettius Marcellus.

The Vettia gens are said to have been natives of this city, but the Vettius, who was inter-rex in the kingly period, can hardly have been of Teate, and the family name Sabinus does not seem to be connected with this branch of the Sabine race.

Asinius Pollio was descended from an old family of Teate and was perhaps the most illustrious of all the Asinii, as the friend of J. Caesar of Horace and Virgil, who dedicated to him the fourth Eclogue. Romanelli and Craven have described the city.

A specimen of the Didrachm is preserved in the Museum at Berlin.

No silver coins of Teate are to be found in the British Museum, a fact which shows how rare these coins are.

VENUSIA.

Venusia was a city of Apulia situated about ten miles South of the river Aufidus, and about twenty-four miles Sout-west of Canusium. The border line of Lucanian territory was about five miles South of the city. Tarentum was about twenty five miles distant to the South East, and Ausculum about twenty miles distant to the North West.

So near was Venusia to Lucania that Horace says "I am in doubt whether I am a Lucanian or an Apulian, for the Venusian farmers plough upon the boundaries of both countries, who (as the ancient tradition has it) were sent on the expulsion of the Samnites, for this purpose, that the enemy might not make incursions on the Romans through a vacant frontier : or lest the Apulian nation, or the fierce Lucanians should make an invasion (Satire, lib. II, 1).

Later writers, such as Pliny and Ptolemy, speak of Venusia as an Apulian city.

Horace in the above quoted passage refers to the colonization of the city after it was taken by the Romans in the year 262 B.C., under L. Postumius, at which time, Dionysius tells us, it was a populous and important town.

Velleius Paterculus mentions the event without giving details (I, 14). The authority for this event is Dionysius (Exc. Vales, p. 2335).

Livy relates how after the battle at Cannæ "The other consul (C. T. Varro) who, whether by chance or of set purpose, had not joined any large body of fugitives, fled with about seventy horsemen to Venusia" (XXII, 49).

Marcellus came to Venusia in 210 B.C. when he was following up Hannibal's army (XXVII, 2). Again in the next year Marcellus entered this city in the summer (XXVII, 20).

In 207 B.C. the Roman army left Venusia to meet Hannibal (XXVII, 41).

The city suffered much through its loyalty to the Roman cause, as we may see from what Livy records of the year 200 B.C.

"Triumvirs were appointed to make up the number of colonists to help Venusia, which had been made weak in the war with Hannibal, C. Terentius Varro, T. Quinctus Flamininus, P. Cornelius Cn., F. Scipio were appointed to the Venusian Colony (XXXI, 49).

The weight of the bronze coinage of the two Roman Colonies of Luceria and Venusia was arranged according to the Italian Pound of 341.10 grammes.

It was one hundredth part of the light Babylonian Silver Talent of the Royal Norm.

Dr Head ascribes the early æs-grave series of cast coins to about 292-250 B.C. (Historia Num., p. 41).

This would mean that these coins were issued by the Apulians before the city was taken by the Romans in 262 B.C.

In 298 B.C. the third Samnite War began, the Samnites invaded Lucania, the lands of the Roman allies in Lucania. It was therefore probably with these heavy cast coins the expenses of that war were met.

Some of the types, as the heads of Pallas and Heracles and the owl shew the influence of Tarentum but the crescent, the spear hand, and the boar point to native symbolism.

ROAIRE (or ROIZE), JACQUES DE (French). Goldsmith of Troyes, by whom is a curious medal, with jugate busts of Henry II., Charles V., Julius Caesar, and an unknown personage, the modelling of which is very clever (Bronze gilt; 13, 5 mill.; illustrated).

Medal, by J. de Roaire.

J. de Roaire was working at Troyes from about 1520 to 1571. His name occurs also as Rouaire, Ruelle, or Roize.

ROBARDEY, ARMAND GUSTAVE JOSEPH (French). Contemporary Sculptor, born at Clamecy (Nièvre); pupil of Jacques Callot. At the Salon of 1901 he exhibited a Portrait-medal in oxydized silver of Dr Lombard.

ROBBE, AUGUSTE (French). Contemporary Sculptor, born at Paris. I saw a Portrait-medallion of a child, by him, exhibited at the Salon of 1890.

ROBBIA, DELLA (Ital.). Vide SPINELLI, NICCOLO DI FORZORE infra. To one of the two sons of Andrea della Robbia, Frati Ambrogio and Luca, " brethren of Savonarola in the convent and his zealous adherents ", are ascribed, on Vasari's authority, a series of ten medals, all derived from two models, with the portrait " of the gloomy prophet and unfortunate reformer ". " With slight deviations ", writes von Fabriczy, " they all reproduce his well-known features with rare fidelity ; his deep set glowing eye, his bony cheeks, the strong nose and protruding lips. Most directly, perhaps, are they expressed in the large medal (illustrated) of the British Museum and the Berlin Cabinet, the only one in which he holds the crucifix. The reverse displays, in an awkward composition, on a field divided by a vertical line, the avenging sword of God and the Holy Ghost hovering over the city of Florence — an allusion to the gloomy prophecies of the implacable censor of morals ". The specimen of this type, described by Armand is 62 mill. in diam. ; the one reproduced above, after Heiss (G. Dreyfus collection) is 95 mill., and the British Museum one, 89 mill. Heiss gives a full description of eight varieties (7 Æ and 1 lead) six of which show on obv. the bust of Savonarola, to left, without the crucifix. The obv. and Rv. legends differ on each variety. All these medals were executed after two prototypes; one is a bust in carnelian by Giovanni delle Corniole (Uffizi Gallery), and the other a bronze bust attributed to one of the Della Robbia.

Fra Girolamo Savonarola (to br.)

Bust of Savonarola.

Fra Ambrogio (PAOLO DELLA ROBBIA (?)) was born 6. April 1468; the date of Fra Luca's (MARIO DELLA ROBBIA (?)) birth is not known. They both entered the convent of San Marco at Florence, where they continued their profession of Sculptors and Plasticatori (enamellers) practised by their father, ANDREA DELLA ROBBIA (1435-1525), who himself was a nephew of the first and famous LUCA DELLA ROBBIA (1400-1482), the author of a series of bas-reliefs for the Florence cathedral, and known chiefly for his works in enamelled terra-cotta, the like of which is named after him " Della Robbiaware ".

Morsolin favours the attribution of the Savonarola medals to Fra Ambrogio della Robbia. However Prof. W. Bode rejects this attribution and gives them to Niccolo Spinelli (q. v.), and states : " To Giovanni della Robbia the Savonarola medals have been assigned, simply because Vasari mentions his having executed a small portrait relief of this friend of the Della Robbia family."

ROCHE, JOHN VERNON (Brit.). Manufacturer of metal buttons for the army, residing at South King St., Dublin, about 1760, in which year he issued a series of private tokens, the so-called " Voce Populi " Halfpence and Farthings. Usual type : Obv. VOCE POPULI. Youthful bust, bare, head laureate; before, P. ℞. HIBERNIA Hibernia seated to l., holding branch and sceptre; her harp at her side; in ex., 1760.

'Voce Populi' Halfpenny, 1760.

It has been suggested that the obverse bust was intended to represent Prince Charles Edward, and that the initial P was for Princeps. Another explanation, suggested by Dr Nelson, on the strength of a pamphlet in the Harleian library, is that the head is that of Hely Hutchinson, afterwards Provost of Dublin, and that the P may indicate Provost. A third suggestion is that " These tokens, in imitation of a regal coinage, were struck in Ireland as an expression of loyalty, and in commemoration of the joyful accession of George Prince of Wales to the crown of the United Kingdom, and the fact that these pieces only bear one date, which chronicles the end of one reign and the beginning of another, would seem to show that at any rate the "Vox Populi" was all on the side of the popular grandson of George II. The pieces bearing P (for Princeps) upon them were doubtless struck earlier in the same year, before his accession as king (W. J. Webster, Sale Catalogue Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge, 16. Nov. 1904, lot. 204).

Dr Nelson describes twelve varieties of Voce Populi Halfpence (some without the P) and two of Farthings. The occasion for the striking of these private tokens was no doubt supplied by the sudden cessation of the issue of regal coins in 1755.

Frazer mentions the name of Roche as a Die-sinker, to whom are ascribed some Prize-medals, etc.

ROCHE, PIERRE (French). Contemporary Sculptor, born and residing at Paris. He was requested by M. Roger Marx to model for the "Société des Amis de la Médaille française" a medal dedicated to Loïe Fuller. "C'est dans un tourbillon de gaze, un corps souple dont les rondeurs vont se fondant et laissant comme une phosphorescence partout où elles se devinent. Bien rarement œuvre a donné avec autant d'intensité la sensation même du phénomène qu'elle doit rappeler".

Loïe Fuller.

Amongst other medallic works by Pierre Roche 'whose fine taste' is praised by M. Marx are : Mélusine (reproduced in Médailleurs français contemporains, Pl. 31, 2); — Fortune; — Nude child on horseback, a study in anatomy, etc.

"On ne saurait demander à Pierre Roche", says M. Saunier, "de s'astreindre aux règles étroites, aux procédés consacrés. L'art, à son avis, peut tout traduire à condition de varier ses manifestations. C'est donc dans un but bien défini que le même artiste qui, dans ses gypsographies, se contente de reliefs imperceptibles, a accusé fortement le corps même de la Loïe Fuller, afin de pouvoir disposer à son gré des saillies du métal dont l'éclat va mourir selon la loi des vibrations lumineuses" (Ch. Saunier, La médaille française contemporaine, Art décoratif, n° 38, 1901).

ROCHETAILLÉE, DE (French). Engraver of coins to the Archbishopric of Lyons, at the beginning of the fourteenth century.

ROEDER, HANNS (Germ.). Mint-warden at Prague, 1583-1586, in succession to Simon Harder. In 1591 he held the same post at Budweis.

ROEG, MICHAEL (or MARTIN). Also REUG or RUCK (Norweg). Medallist of the first half of the eighteenth century, born about 1685, worked at Copenhagen till 1715 when he was called over to France, receiving 1000 livres to defray his journeying expenses. He abjured the protestant faith, but on the death of Louis XIV. he found himself in straightened circumstances, and was on the point of accepting an offer from the King of Portugal to go to Lisbon, when the Regent, Duke Philip of Orleans, attached him to his service, and granted him a pension of 1200 livres.

Some of his medals are signed: RÖG. He executed about sixty pieces, either as originals or reproductions of the Louis XIV. and XV. series, but he does not appear to have produced any work of superior merit.

Amongst his best known productions I may mention: Memorial Medal of Prince George of Denmark, 1708 (two varieties, one with bust of Prince George; signed: RÖG; Med. Ill., II, p. 334, n^{os} 163, 164); — Victories of the French and Spaniards at Ekeren, 1703 (engraved in conjunction with T. Bernard in 1715); — Ant. Coypel, painter, 1661-1728; — Philip, Duke of Orleans, and his consort, 1715; — Elizabeth Charlotte, Duchess of Orleans, 1717, etc.

From the accounts of the Paris Mint, we know that the artist executed the following dies: 1715. Head of Louis XIV.; — Hôtel des Invalides; — 1716. Die and puncheon; — 1717. Die; — 1720. Capture of Ivraea; — 1721. Regency of the Queen Mother; — Naval Battle of Carthagena; — Birth of Louis XV.; — Recovery of the King (1721); — 1722. Crowned bust of Louis XV. (3 var.); — 1723. Peace of Rastadt; — Constancy of the King; — 1725. India Company; — Hunting; — Navigation restored; — Hopes centred in the King; — 1726. Marsal surrendered to Louis XV.; — Conquest of Franche-Comté; — 1727. Reestablishment of the Compagnie des Cadets; — 1728. Birth of the Dauphin; — 1729. Reestablishment of the Navy; — Dunkirk preserved from bombardment; — Capture of Philippsburg; — Defeat of the Duke of Bavaria; — 1730. Interview between Louis XV. and Philip IV.; — Pyramid erected at Rome; — Regulations for Buoys and Lanterns; — The two seas' Canal; — 1733. Conquest of Franche-Comté; — Conquest of Holland; — Peace of the North; — 1736. Battle of Liorens and Capture of Balaguier; — Battle of Rethel; — Capture of Dunkirk; — Right of precedence recognized by Spain, etc.

The following medals are signed: RÖG.; M. RÖG; RÖG F.; or Rög: — Louis XIV. Battle of Carthagena; — Campaign of 1647; — Engagement of Eckeren; — Louis XV. France's happiness; — Bust of the Regent's mother; — Coronation of the King at Rheims; — Reestablishment of the Company of Cadets; — Conquest of the Milanese provinces, etc.

Roeg was almost exclusively employed to recut dies of the Louis XIV. series which had become damaged by use and to do the work which the Engraver-general or the chief Medallists at the Mint would not undertake themselves.

ROEMER, GEORG (Germ.). Medallist born at Munich, and later residing at Florence; one of the few remaining artists who still engrave their dies, instead of making use of the reducing-machine. He is the author of a series of medals symbolizing: Spring time, Harvesting, Vintage, Yuletide, etc.

ROETTIERS. Several Medallists proceeded from a family of the name of Roettiers, whose members distinguished themselves in the art for nearly two centuries and worked for the Kings of England, France, and Spain. The founder of the family, Philip Roettiers, was born at Antwerp in 1596, and was still living in 1660; the last descendant connected with the Paris Mint, Alexandre Louis Roettiers de Montaleau, was born in 1748, and appointed Director of the Paris Mint in 1791, whilst Joseph Charles Roettiers de la Bretèche, Medallist in Paris, passed through trouble during the Revolution.

The following genealogical table will show at a glance the family relation of the various medallists of the name of Roettiers to one another.

ROETTIERS DE MONTALEAU, ALEXANDRE LOUIS (French). Son of Jacques (IV) Roettiers, and grand-son of Norbert R.; born at Paris, 22. November 1748; died on 27. February 1855.

He was a goldsmith by profession, and from 1765 to 1772 worked in partnership with his father, but in 1775 he retired, and obtained an official post at the Chambre des Comptes. On 30. August 1791 he was appointed Director of the Paris Mint. The original document of his official appointment is in my possession.

During the first two years of his tenure of office he was subjected, under the Comité du salut public, to great annoyances, but he nevertheless remained in the public service until 17. Fructidor An V, when he was replaced by Charles Pierre de l'Espine. His privy-mark on the coins is a cornucopiae.

From the time of his retirement into private life, nothing more is known of the former Goldsmith of Louis XV.

He was a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

ROETTIERS, CHARLES NORBERT (French). Son of Joseph Charles Roettiers, grandson of Joseph R., and great-grandson of Philip (I) R. Born at Paris, 15 August 1720; Engraver general of the French coins, 1753-1772; " Graveur particulier " at the Paris Mint, 1759-1772; died a bachelor, 19. November 1772.

Like several other members of his family, Charles Norbert Roettiers had the honour of being received a member of the 'Académie royale de Peinture et de Sculpture", in 1764, on the presentation of the die of a medal showing a group of Painting and Sculpture, with the motto: Amicae quamvis aemulae, which afterwards served for the fabrication of the jetons of M. de Julienne, 1765 bequeathed to the Academy.

On his death, Joseph Charles, his father, retook possession of the office of Engraver-general of the coins, until 1774, when he ceded it to Pierre Simon Benjamin Duvivier.

Charles Norbert Roettiers exhibited medals and jetons at the Salons of 1753, 1761, 1765, 1769, and 1771.

ROETTIERS, FRANÇOIS (Flem.). Son of Philip Roettiers Junr, and grandson of Philip Roettiers senr, founder of this celebrated family of medallists. Francis (or François) was born in London on 3. November 1685. He learned engraving under his father's tuition, and quite young went over to Paris, where he practised the art, and later became first Painter to the Elector of Bavaria, who resided at St. Cloud, and Professor at the French 'Académie de peinture et de Sculpture'. About 1718 he was called to Vienna, and appointed (1720) Director of the Academy of Fine Arts in that city, where he died on 10. June 1743.

Pinchart states that François Roettiers' works are often confused with those of his brother Philippe, who equally signed his productions with R. François Roettiers' best medals are a Portrait-piece of Charles VI., ℞ Crown resting on plough, and the Bohemian Coronation medal of Empress Elizabeth Christina, 1722.

The emperor Charles VI. granted letters of nobility to the artist in 1720.

For a description of Franz von Rottiers' work at Vienna, confer Dr Albert Ilg's notice.

François Roettiers married in Paris, on 12. July 1712, Jeanne Hacquet, widow of François Heurté.

ROETTIERS, GEORGES (Flem.). Son of Joseph Roettiers, by his first wife, and grandson of Philip Roettiers Senr. The date of his birth is not known, but he died in Paris, at the Mint, 6. January 1749. He succeeded his father as Engraver at the Paris Mint, and remained in office from 1703 to 1748, when he resigned the post on behalf of his son, Joseph Charles. He held also the appointment of "Privy Medallist to Louis XV".

The Paris Mint Museum possesses no puncheon by this artist, whose productions were not signed. La Chenaye-Desbois states that he acquired a great reputation in his art. Of his six children, only one son, JOSEPH CHARLES, born on 12. January 1722, followed his father's profession.

The name of this Engraver occurs on official documents in the following forms, Roëttiers, Roettiers, Roettiez, Roettier, Rœtier, Rottier, Rottie, Rotiers, Rotier, Rothier, Rothiez, Roittiers and Roitier.

ROETTIERS, JAMES (I) (Brit.). Second son of John Roettiers, and grandson of Philip (I) Roettiers; born in London in 1663 (others say at Antwerp in 1661); Engraver at the Royal Mint, London, where he succeeded to George Bower, 1690-1697; died in 1698 at Bromley (Kent) from the effects of a fall from his horse.

"From about 1680 he assisted his father at the English Mint in making dies and puncheons (Cal. Treasury Papers, 1556-1696, pp. 108, 110, 513; 1697-1701-2, p. 195), and in 1690 (on the death of Bower) was officially employed as an Assistant-engraver at the mint, together with his brother Norbert. An annual salary of 325 l. was divided between the brothers. In 1697 (before July) James Roettiers was removed from his office at the mint in consequence of the theft of dies from the Tower (see under ROETTIERS, JOHN (II)). He was however allowed to retain his dies and puncheons for medals." (W. Wroth, James Roettiers, Dict. Nat. Biog. xlix, p. 98).

James (I) Roettiers' principal medals are: Battle of La Hogue, $\frac{19}{29}$ May 1692 (illustrated). This medal, of which there are two other varieties, of smaller size, thought by some to be patterns for coins, is probably by this artist although he did not sign it; — Death of Queen Mary, $\frac{28.\text{Dec.}}{7.\text{Jan.}}$ 169 $\frac{4}{5}$; ℞. INVIDI ; inscription across the field (by James and Norbert Roettiers ; 'specimens in copper were sold at the price of five shillings soon after the Queen's death') ; — Another ; ℞. Sun setting behind hill ('medal made of two thin plates united in a strong rim'); — Another; ℞. Interior of Chapel ; signed : I. R. (2 var. ; Med. Ill., nos 366-7); — Medal of Charles I. ; ℞. VIRTVTEM EX ME (by James and Norbert Roettiers) ; — Presentation of New Collar to the Lord Mayor of Dublin, 1697 ; ℞. Inscription ; signed on obv. James R. F. ('one of James Roettiers' best medals', says Mr. Wroth).

It is impossible to assign any coins to James Roettiers, but it is probable that a large number of the dies for the coinage of William and Mary were prepared by him, in conjunction with his brother Norbert. (For a list of coins see John R. infra.) On the copper coins of 1694 a small satyr's head was said to have been introduced within the head of William III., no doubt in error.

ROETTIERS, JAMES II (Flem.). Medallist and Coin-engraver ; son of James I Roettiers; born at Bromley (Kent) 1698, on the year of his father's death; settled at Paris, 1718 ; went over to the Low-Countries, 1733, on the death of his uncle, Philip (II) where he held the office of Engraver-general of the coins of the Netherlands, from 31. August 1733 till his death at Brussels, on 15. July 1772. His son, JAMES III ROETTIERS came to London in 1733 with his cousin, James, son of Norbert.

Among Jacques (II) Roettier's medals, usually signed R, we find : Commemorative jeton of the Reconstruction of the Brussels Mint, 1756 ; — Portrait-medal of Charles of Lorraine, 1756 ; — Medal of the Academy of Brussels, 1768; — Medal of the Academy of Antwerp, 1770 ; — Portrait-medal of Maria Theresia, 1734 (signed : R.) ; — Portrait-medal (retrospective) of Joseph II. ; — Medal dedicated to Maria Elizabeth, governor of the Low-Countries, 1727 (R) ; — Inauguration of the University of Louvain, 1728 ; — Wise rule of Maria Elizabeth, 1729 ; — The Jansenists and Anti-constitutionalists, 1730 ; — Brave behaviour of Maria Elizabeth at the Fire of Brussels Palace, and Death of her Prime Minister ; —

Portrait-medal of Maria Theresia, 1734.

Portrait-medals of Maria Elizabeth, governor of the Low-Countries (several varieties, of different dates, and undated ; all signed R.) ; — Conrad, Duke of Ursel, governor of the Low-Countries ; — Courageous attitude of Maria Elizabeth, governor of the Low-Countries, 1733 ; — Piety of Maria Elizabeth (1734); obv. Bust; ℞. Ship (R. on both sides) ; — Neutrality of the Low-Countries during Maria Elizabeth's rule (1735); — Resolution of Maria Elizabeth not to resign her governorship and not return to Vienna (1738) ; — Foundation of Brussels Almshouses (1738); — Accession of Maria Theresia ; Homage of the Low-Countries (1740) ; — Benevolence of the governor of the Low-Countries, Maria Elizabeth (1741) ; — Homage of Namur to Maria Theresia (1744) ; — Charles Alexander, Duke of Lorraine, commemorates the coronations of Charles V., Charles VI. and Joseph II, 1764 ; — Courtrai School of Midwifery, 1780 (signed R. ; probably executed from an earlier die by J. Roettiers) ; — Maria Theresia, 1767 (R.), etc.

On 27. February 1744 Jacques Rottiers was called upon to take up temporarily the post of Engraver at the Mint of Bruges (Rev. belge num., 1897, p. 230).

He engraved the Seals of state and private ones as well. His own are reproduced in Rev. belge num., 1895, p. 282.

Jacques Roettiers married Philipp Louis Roettiers' niece, Catherine Verwilt († 1762) and had two children, who survived him : Elisabeth Jeanne Thérèse, and François Marie Thérèse. He died suddenly at Brussels, 15. July 1772.

In 1772 the Austrian government of the Low-Countries purchased from the executors of Jacques Roettiers the puncheons and dies left by the artist. They are now in the Brussels Museum, and have been catalogued by Piot (G. Cumont, Revue belge de num., 1891, 135).

ROETTIERS DE LA TOUR, JAMES (IV) or JACQUES (Flem.). Medallist and Goldsmith, son of Norbert Roettiers and his wife, Winifred Clarke, niece of the Duke of Marlborough ; born at Saint-Germain en Laye, 20. August 1707 ; the elder Pretender stood sponsor at his christening. He learned drawing and sculpture, was 'pensionnaire du Roi', obtained a Prize, and was to go to Rome with Cardinal de Rohan, when his uncle, Georges Roettiers, was advised to let him be taught medal-engraving, before leaving Paris. Georges Roettiers died before James had finished his apprenticeship. In 1730 (or January 1731) he went to London, in the company of his cousin James (III), son of James (II), and obtained an appointment of Engraver at the English mint. He had brought over with him several dies for medals and medallions, executed by his grandfather, John Roettiers, and had intended asking for leave to strike medallions of the twelve Caesars, the Duchesses of Mazarin, Richmond, and Portsmouth, and of other celebrities. The dies had come into his possession from his father Norbert, who himself inherited them from John Roettiers. Sir Hans Sloane and Dr Mead encouraged James in his intention, and promised the artist an appartment at the Royal Mint, which he refused. They advised him to engrave a series of medals with portraits of celebrated Englishmen, and Conduit procured for him drawings of Newton, Locke, and others. Dr Mead thought it would be better to leave the twelve Caesars, as they were, without legends around the heads, and to place the name within a laurel-wreath on the reverse, which he did. He executed a Portrait-medal of Sir Isaac Newton, which he signed R ; it is dated, 1739; he also engraved a head of the Duke of Beaufort, and as his grandfather had made one of the Duke's father, the dies of which had been damaged, he executed others. Only one or two specimens of each of those two medals were struck. The Elder Pretender had appointed James 'Engraver to the Mint' in 1727 on Norbert Roettiers' death. In 1733 the Engraver returned to Paris; married on 6. June 1734 Marie Anne Besnier, the sixteen year old daughter of Nicolas Besnier, goldsmith to Louis XV., who died in 1737, and whom he succeeded.

His principal works in the goldsmith's art date from this period. In 1765 he took his son Alexandre Louis into partnership, but retired in 1772. In this year, the artist was raised to the peerage, with the title of 'Noble' and 'Ecuyer' conferred to him and his children. The Académie royale de Peinture et de Sculpture admitted him a member in 1773 on the presentation of the puncheons of the Portrait-medals of Locke and Newton, which he had formerly executed in England.

Baron Pichon has described a number of articles of plate by Jacques Roettiers, and among his best known medals are: John Locke (medal executed in 1731 in compliment to the memory of Locke; the dies are in the British Museum; signed: Jac. Roettiers); — Sir Isaac Newton, 1739 (obv. signed: Jac. Roettiers; R. R.; illustrated); — Small Portrait-medal (oval) of Sir Isaac Newton (in Dr S. Bousfield's collection); — The Duke of Beaufort, 1730

Sir Isaac Newton, 1739.

(signed: Jac. Roettiers. f.); — Convention of Prado, 1739 (signed: I. R. FECIT a James Roettiers fecit?).

Jacques Roettiers died at the Galeries du Louvre on 17. May 1784, and was buried at the age of seventy-seven, in the Church of St. Germain-L'Auxerrois.

There is a portrait of him by C. N. Cochin, and another by Auguste de Saint-Aubin, 1771.

One of his sons, also named JACQUES (V) practised the goldsmith's art and was his father's partner for many years.

A Portrait-plaque of Samuel Pepys, the diarist (attributed to Norbert Roettiers by Mr. W. J. Webster) is possibly by James Roettiers, and belongs to the series of celebrated Englishmen, which was only begun, when the artist returned to France.

NUMISMATIC SOCIETIES, MUSEUMS, &c.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC SOCIETY.

Nov. 30. — Annual Meeting. — Mr. W. J. Andrew, President, in the chair. — The Reports of the Council and Treasurer were read. The roll of the Society comprised 19 Royal, 20 Honorary, and 496 Ordinary Members, and its financial position was very satisfactory. — The following members were elected to hold office in the coming year: President, Mr. Carlyon-Britton; Vice-Presidents, Lord Grantley, Lord Peckover of Wisbech, Mr. G. R. Askwith, Mr. L. A. Lawrence, and Mr. Bernard Roth; Director, Mr. Shirley Fox; Treasurer, Mr. A. C. Hutchins; Librarian, Lieut.-Col. H. W. Morrieson; Secretary, Mr. W. J. Andrew; Council, Miss Helen Farquhar, Major W. Freer, Dr. Stanley Bousfield, Fleet-Surgeon Weightman, and Messrs. A. Anscombe, P. J. D. Baldwin, T. Bearman, L. E. Bruun, W. Smith Churchill, Mellor Lumb, W. Sharp Ogden, Max Rosenheim, Samuel M. Spink, H. W. Taffs, and Russell H. Wood. A Research Fund has been established, and a professional archivist, working under the direction of the Council, is now employed with the object of discovering items of numismatic interest in the public records for the Society's Journal. — Lord Grantley and Lieut.-Col. Morrieson were appointed to represent the Society at the Numismatic Conference to be held at Brussels next summer.

Mr. L. A. Lawrence read a paper on 'Coin-Weights.' These are abundant and interesting but virtually unstudied. Their use was necessitated by the introduction of a gold coinage in the thirteenth century, and much documentary evidence was brought forward by the lecturer, who proved that many weights referred to therein can still be identified. The workmanship of some of these counterpoises is good, especially in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; and celebrated names, such as Briot and Kirk, appear upon them. The last issued by law in England are dated 1843, and bear on them Wyon's beautiful bust of Queen Victoria. The coin-weights of Ireland finally received attention, and were discussed with the same diligence and wealth of detail which characterized the English portion of the paper.

Mr. Shirley Fox, in a paper on 'The Heavy Coinage of Edward III.,' showed that Richard de Bury, Bishop of Durham, struck pennies which bear the Lombardic N. Coins characterized by this letter were attributed by Hawkins to Edward II.; but they extend to as late as 1344, and the small crown within a lozenge-shaped compartment on the reverse of the Durham penny (Hawkins, 302) was adopted from the arms of the abbey at St. Edmundsbury, the native place of Richard, who derived his name from it. The corresponding York coin (Hawkins, 303) was struck by Archbishop Melton, under a grant of dies, dated 1331, which states that there had been no grant since 1300.

Exhibits. — By Mr. Edgar Lincoln, a selection of coin-weights temp. James I., with sets of scales and printed lists. By Miss H. Farquhar and Mr. W. Charlton, collections of coin-weights. By Mr. Lionel Fletcher, a coin-weight issued by R. Lord, Essay Master, Dublin. By Mr. Shirley Fox, late pennies of Edward II.; heavy pennies of Edward III. weighing 22 ¼ grains, with pellet stops, and the Lombardic N; lighter pennies of the same, weighing 20 ¼ grains, issued in 1344-5. By Mr. Henry Garside, communion tokens from St. Kilda, and a replica in copper of the badge of the Lord Provost of Glasgow. By Mr. J. B S. Mac Ilwaine, a York penny of Edward the Confessor (Carlyon-Britton, type VII.) reading + DPAR·DRE: Presentations: by Mr. E. H. Waters, a collection of coin-weights; by Mr. S. M. Spink, a copy of his 'Medal-Ribbon Book.'

ROYAL NUMISMATIC SOCIETY.

Exhibitions: Mr. Thomas Bliss, some English farthings, including two of the Commonwealth in brass, and a third in copper (a pattern with the initial of Rawlins under the centre pillar); a farthing of Cromwell, and four in pewter of Charles II. Mr. A. H. Baldwin, two unpublished Roman coins: a denarius of Septimius Severus with reverse type Veritas, and a second brass of Jovian with reverse type Anubis on dog. — Dr. Codrington exhibited, and read notes on, a series of copper coins of Makalla in Hadramut, lent by Mr. D. F. Howorth.

Mr. H. A. Grueber read a paper on 'The Silver Coinage of the Roman Republic.' He explained the reasons which have enabled modern numismatists to ascribe the introduction of a silver currency to Rome to 269-8 B.C., and showed that the coins which have been attributed by some to the time of the kings are forgeries, probably of the eighteenth century. Mr. Grueber next discussed the origin of the scruple standard, the various changes which took place in the silver standard, and officially issued plated coins, and

M. E. ZAY.

M. E. Zay, dont le nom était bien connu parmi les numismates, est décédé au commencement de décembre 1909.

Il s'était spécialisé dans l'étude des monnaies des colonies françaises, et pendant plus de 40 ans il avait travaillé à constituer une collection de toutes les monnaies et médailles des colonies françaises, M. Zay avait expose cette collection unique à l'Exposition de 1900, et il y a deux ans, il en fit don à l'Etat. Elle occupe actuellement deux vitrines au Cabinet des médailles. M. Zay avait consigné le résultat de ses travaux dans une volumineuse Histoire monétaire des Colonies françaises, et il s'occupait de préparer une 2e édition de ce remarquable ouvrage lorsque la mort est venue le surprendre dans sa 80e année.

M. Zay avait toujours habité dans notre arrondissement : depuis plus de 30 ans il demeurait 3, rue Montholon. Il laisse une fille qui est professeur au lycée Molière, et qui est mariée avec M. Brody, notre aimable confrère du Radical.

Nous leur adressons ainsi qu'à sa veuve l'expression de nos bien sympathiques condoléances.

Jomini, conservateur du Musée d'Avenches, avec l'autorisation du Département de l'instruction publique et des cultes et le concours de M. Julien Gruaz, assistant de M. de Molin, 26 monnaies de grande valeur (or, argent et bronze), qui figuraient jadis au Médaillier d'Avenches et qui avaient été transportées à Lausanne, ont été rendues à Avenches, qui en échange a remis au Médaillier cantonal 32 monnaies du moyen âge et modernes. A de même été réintégrée au Musée d'Avenches la fameuse inscription découverte en 1809 aux Conches, près Avenches, puis placée à la Borde, ensuite au Musée archéologique, à Lausanne.

COINS OF MAGNA GRAECIA

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS.

(The Coinage of the Greek Colonies of Southern Italy).

1. Vol., 8vo, paper covers, 336 pp., with numerous illustrations in the text, one Map and a Chart.

"The Coins of Magna Græcia" contains information that certainly cannot be found elsewhere in English. A great deal more has been done than a mere digest of Sambon, Evans, and Lenormant, — there is plenty of independent work. English Collectors of Greek coins ought to be very grateful for the collection of so much good material, and most especially for the arrangement of everything in chronological periods, which are so much more satisfactory than the system of the volume on Italy of the British Museum Catalogue, the only volume that was accessible hitherto. FOR COLLECTORS OF MODERATE MEANS.

"Coins of Magna Græcia", by the Rev. A. W. Hands (London, Spink and Son Limited, 17 and 18, Piccadilly, W.).

Mr. Hands deprecates the notion of being mistaken for an expert, but he is a fellow of the Royal Numismatic Society, and has shown already in his work on "Common Greek Coins" how attractive he can make the subject for experienced collectors no less than for beginners. In this new work he deals with the coins of Magna Graecia — the Greek colonies scattered over the foot of Italy — as he had dealt previously with the coins of Greece; and he has such a wealth of illustration at his command that, whilst he treats the coinage with detail and exactitude, his readers learn both history and geography, and are entertained with myth and legend. Mr. Hands has specially in view the requirements of collectors of modest means, and he assures us that large numbers of these coins may be obtained at a very small cost. The work begins with the history and coinage of Tarentum, to which no less than 51 pages are devoted, but then much of the information applies no less to other colonies. The coinage of Metapontum has 29 pages, and many examples of the coins will make readers long to get at the originals. Twenty-one colonies in all are dealt with, and there is also a carefully-written essay on the weight standards, to which is appended a diagrammatic chart. We may add that the book is beautifully printed, well indexed, and has a first-rate map.

It seems to me to be just the sort of book to interest people in the subject. I remember that I was always repelled from Greek and Roman numismatics by the dulness of the exponents. It all seemed to me so far away and remote from human interest.

Your method of illuminating the history by means of the art and imagination illustrated by the coin is the right way.

I hope the book will be as successful as it deserves to be. It represents a vast amount of study and research, not forgetting the crack-jaw German!

THE

MODERN COPPER COINS

OF THE

MUHAMMADANS

BY W. H. VALENTINE.

This work, which it proposed to issue shortly, is designed to popularise the study of Muhammadan copper coins, and is the outcome of a student's endeavour to identify and arrange them. To this end the author has made faithful drawings of all the specimens of this class of coin that he has been able to find. Commencing with Turkey, the reader is taken numismatically through Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, to Nigeria (for which place the Royal Mint has recently struck a new coinage) and from thence back to East Africa and Arabia. Crossing from there to Europe, the tour continues throught the Crimea, Georgia, Persia, Afghanistan, Bukhara, and terminates in Chinese Turkistan.

Upwards of 900 coins struck during the last three centuries are illustrated, and the Arabic inscriptions carefully transliterated and explained. To assist in the classification of the coins, a geographical arrangement has been adopted, and six coloured maps have been added to enable the reader to locate the various mints.

The interesting field covered by this work has never as yet been dealt with, possibly on account of the great expense involved. It has been suggested that this may be lessened by using the line block process, and printing the major portion in manuscript form. The author hopes that sufficient promises of support will be received to enable the book to be published at a price not exceeding 10/6 a copy, and he trusts that numismatists generally will give the project a hearty support.

N. B. Since the above announcement was prepared orders for nearly a hundred copies of Mr. Valentine's work have been received by the author and ourselves. It is therefore now confidently hoped that sufficient encouragement may yet be accorded so that the publication of so valuable and unique a work of reference may not be much longer delayed.

It may be mentioned here that it is proposed to strictly limit the edition to 500 copies.

Illustrated specimen-page with Order-form, on application to Spink and Son Ltd.

I have had an opportunity of seeing what Mr. Valentine's proposed work is like, and I can confidently say that it will be of great use to Numismatists, who are often puzzled in assigning their Eastern Coins to the exact localities to which they belong — especially to such as have not the time or opportunity of studying the languages so essential to their elucidation.

Every coin named is fully illustrated and explained : and from one such, very often several others can be successfully allocated.

Its value will be appreciated the more as its pages are consulted.

DANIEL F. HOWORTH.

Un dictionnaire simple, précis et d'une érudition agréable, je dirai presque de lecture plaisante, ayant pour thème un sujet que l'érudition analytique a renfermé dans le cercle restreint des spécialistes, est une œuvre extrêmement utile : notre collaborateur, M. M. Forrer est un travailleur, un numismate érudit ; il a le sentiment de l'art et ce qui n'est pas toujours facile, il sait exprimer sa pensée clairement et sans longueurs. GREEK COINS.

APULIA or CALABRIA.

Two cities, Azetium and Butuntum, are generally classed by numismatists as belonging to Calabria, but nevertheless are acknowledged to belong to Apulia. This may be accounted for by the uncertainty of the way in which the boundaries of these districts were regarded by the ancients.

There appears to be no natural boundary such as a river or chain of hills between these regions.

From Strabo we may gather no exact geographical boundary; he says "above these (the Calabrians) towards the North lie the Peucetii, and those who are called Daunii in the Greek language, but the inhabitants call the whole region beyond the Calabri, Apulia". "Messapia forms a peninsula: the isthmus extending from Brentesium to Tarentum which bounds it, being three hundred and ten stadia."

Under Vespasian the boundary of Calabria was extended farther to the North (liber Colon. p. 261).

The distance from Tarentum to the West coast is about 30 miles across the isthmus.

From Pliny's third book we know that in his time, that is, 23-79 A.D. several of the cities in Southern Apulia were accounted to be Calabrian. Hence the doubt in which region Azetium and Butuntum should be reckoned.

AZETINI.

In the Catalogues of the British and Berlin Museums the coins of Azetium are placed under Calabria, but there are two references to a town spelt somewhat differently, which have been thought to refer to the city from which the coins bearing ΑΞΕΤΙΝΩΝ were issued. The one is Ehetium in the Tabula Peutinger, in which the site is marked as twelve miles south-east of Bari, at a village now called Rutigliano; the other reference is that of Pliny to the Aegetini which he places among the "Calabrorum Mediterranei", and probably it was from this reference that the coins were placed under Calabria in the Brit. Mus. Catalogue. In Murray's Handy Classical Atlas Azetium is marked as in Apulia, about fifty-three miles north of Brundusium, and about thirty-five miles north of the border line between Apulia and Calabria. It was situated about five miles from the sea, on the fertile plain which stretches along that coast.

In Paulys Real Encyclopädie Azetium is called "stadt in Apulien". He does not add any further information to that here given.

The coins are all of bronze bearing legends in Greek characters and types copied from those of Tarentum and Metapontum.

Between 281 and 272 B.C. the drachms of Tarentum bore the head of Pallas, and an owl and olive branch on the Reverse, and between 272-235 on the Reverse of drachms we find the owl seated on an Ionic capitol, just as on the bronze coins of Azetium.

Among the bronze coins of Metapontum we find one type similar to that on another coin of Azetium, on the Obverse, an eagle to left with wings extended, on the Reverse an ear of barley and fulmen; this latter symbol is omitted on the similar coin of Azetium (confer p. 80, Coins of Magna Graecia, n° 17).

We may therefore ascribe these coins with the legend ΑΞΕΤΙ-ΝΩΝ to the period between 270 and 230 B.C. Their types like those of most of the Apulian cities bear witness to the influence of the Greek Colonists of the southern coast.

BRONZE COINS OF THE AZETINI.

Obv. An eagle to right with wings extended, seated on a thunderbolt.

Rev. ΑΞΕΤ, in field to left, an ear of barley with leaf on right side: plain border.

II. Size .8.

Obv. Head of Pallas to right, wearing crested Corinthian helmet, earring and necklace: on the helmet, a star of eight rays.

Rev. ΑΞΕΤΙΝΩΝ. An owl to right, on top of an Ionic column; in front of owl an olive-branch: plain border.

BUTUNTUM.

Although Butuntum and Azetium were cities of Apulia they are both classed as belonging to Calabria in the Catalogue of the British Museum, and apparently for the same reason; viz, that Pliny mentions them among the cities "Calabrorum mediterranei" (III, xi ad fin).

From its position however it must have belonged to the Peucetians of Apulia. In the Itineraries it is placed on the road between Barium and Canusium.

The site of Butuntum is about fifty miles north of Tarentum, about seventy-five from Brundusium and thirty-five from the borders of Calabrian territory. Butuntum was twenty miles north-west of Azetium, and Cœlia was on the road between the two cities about equidistant from each.

The coins of all three cities shew the same influence of Tarentum in their types.

The similarity of type would have to be combined with sameness of weight if any commercial federation were signified by the types.

BRONZE COINS OF BUTUNTUM.

I. Size .7, some size .8.

Obv. A cockle-shell: border of dots.

Rev. BYTON TINΩN. Taras seated on dolphin, to left, holding kantharos and club of Heracles: plain border.

CALABRIA

The lowland region in the south-eastern corner of Italy lying between two seas, was called by the ancients Messapia, a name which signifies its position between the seas. The inhabitants in the seventh century before Christ were known as Iapygians, but we can hardly say whether ἀπυξ the old word for the west-north-west wind was in any way connected with the name of the mythical founder or leader of the Cretan race which is said to have settled in Messapia in prehistoric times.

Strabo says "all the peoples who reach as far as Daunia were called Iapygians, from Iapyx who was born to Daedalus by a Cretan woman, and became a chief leader of the Cretans" (XII, 523). Servius in his notes on Virgil's, Aen. (III, 332) tells a similar tale. Herodotus says the Cretans who had formed the army of Minos on their return from Sicily were cast upon the coast of Iapygia, where they founded the city of Hyria, and assumed the name Messapians (VII, 170.)

If we may derive that name from μέσσος and ἄπιος, they called themselves by a name descriptive of their new home.

Another version of the myth is told by Antoninus Liberalis, who flourished in the second century A.D. He calls Iapyx a son of Lycaon and brother of Daunius and Peucetius, who went as leaders of bands of colonists to Italy. The Calabrians most probably crossed the Adriatic to Italy and were descended from the Galabrii, for Strabo says "To the Dardaniatae belong the Galabrii in whose territory is an ancient city". (VII, c. v, § 7.)

There was a king of the Illyrian tribe the Taulantii who bore the name Galabrus and it has been conjectured that the name Galabrii is a second name of that tribe. The Messapian Iapygians were also most probably in a like manner related to the Illyrian Iapygians, and the Chones (Κῶνες) on the Siris to the Κάονες of Epeirus, and the Sallentini with the Salluntini. The Oenotrians among whose tribes were the Chones were Pelasgians descended from an Illyrian race. The Greeks represented Oenotrus as one of the sons of Lycaon the son of Pelasgus who emigrated from Arcadia at a very early period (Pausanes, VIII, 3.5).

The story of Strabo that the Iapygians came from Crete must therefore be taken to apply only to a small tribe or city, and the union of all these tribes on their common hostility to the Greek colonists is explained by their common origin from Illyria.

The name Messapia was used in the time of Polybius and Strabo.

The language of the Messapians is said by Mommsen to have borne but a very distant analogy to those of the Oscans and Ausonians of the western side of Italy, and to have been more akin to that of the Greeks. The two principal tribes inhabiting Messapia were the Sallentini and the Calabri, and from the name of this latter tribe the Romans called the region Calabria. Virgil attributes to the Sallentini a Cretan origin, "and Lyctian Idomeneus with his troops has possessed the plains of Sallentum" (Aen., III, 400). Servius in his note on this passage says that Sextus Pompey derived their name "a salo".

Niebuhr thought the Calabri were intruders of an Oscan race, but that opinion has not found much favour. The name Καλαβροι is first met with in the writings of Polybius who was born about the year 204 B.C.

In modern times the name Calabria has been applied to the district on the west coast known to the ancients as Bruttium.

This alteration arose on account of the Byzantine Emperors calling the whole of Southern Italy Calabria, when it was under their rule. When they lost their dominion in Italy it happened that Bruttium was the last of their possessions to be held by them, and as they called it still Calabria that name has clung to it.

The modern name of the ancient Messapia is "Terra di Otranto".

Virgil's description of the country is very accurate "Quum procul obscuros colles humilemque videmus Italiam, Italiam primus conclamat Achates" (Aen., III, 522).

The land contains no mountains, and scarcely any high hills, the soil, consisting of a soft tertiary lime-stone, so readily absorbs all moisture that no rivers are formed. The soil is especially adapted to the growth of olives, and fruits of various kinds abound. Good wine was made from its grapes, and the land was celebrated both for its wool and honey.

From a passage in Virgil's Georgics (III, 425) we learn that it was infested with dangerous snakes.

The celebrated horses of the Tarentines were bred on the Messapian downs. Polybius says that in his day the Apulians and Messapians together could furnish not less than sixteen thousand cavalry (II, 24).

The Greek colonists, who brought to these Messapians a higher civilization, arrived about 708 B.C. and settled in Tarentum. It was not however without much fighting that the Greek supremacy was acquired.

Clearchus told the story of the destruction of the Iapygian city Carbina, the site of which was probably about twelve miles north of Brundisi. In that seige the Greeks perpetrated such atrocities that the wrath ot the Gods was believed to rest upon them, so Athenaeus tells us in recounting the sad story (lib. XII, 23, p. 522).

In 473 B.C. the Iapygians defeated the Tarentines and inflicted upon them such slaughter as no Greek army had ever experienced (Herodotus, VII, 170).

Diodorus Siculus says the Iapygians had an army of twenty thousand men, and that in the flight of the Greeks from the field of battle, the Iapygians followed the fugitives in two bands, one to the gates of Tarentum, the other as far as to Rhegium (XI, LII). About 135 years afterwards the Tarentines again took the field having called for the help of the Spartan Archidamus who fell fighting the Iapygians on the very day of Philip's victory at Chaeroneia. Strabo tells the story of the similar fate which befell Agathocles (VI, 281).

The war was chiefly waged by the inland tribes, as the Iapygians dwelling in the cities on the coast gradually became enervated by luxury, and more readily fell under Greek influence. Athenaeus describes their luxury and effeminate garments (XII, 253).

Hence the conquest of the Peninsular by the Romans was rendered easy, and was attained in one single campaign, which is thus briefly recounted by Florus.

"The Sallentines shared the fate of the people of Picenum, and Brundusium, the chief city of the country, with its famous harbour, was taken by Marcus Atilius". Zonarus also relates the story in (VIII, 7).

The Sallentini revolted to Hannibal during the second Punic war in 213 B.C., but were again reduced to subjection (Livy XXV. 1; XXVII, 36).

The coins of the Messapians reveal very little of the thoughts or habits of the people; they show that in regard to art their citizens depended entirely upon the Greeks of Tarentum.

As to their religious beliefs, the coins show that they worshiped the gods of Greece; the heads of the following deities appear on their coins, Zeus, Poseidon, Pallas, Aphrodite, Eros and Nike, the last two being represented as standing or flying. The demigod Heracles appears and we see the head of a beardless warrior, wearing an Italian conical helmet with a small crest, who may represent some unknown Iapygian leader; perhaps Iapyx or Phalanthus.

The accounts of the Messapians which have been handed down to our time all come from their enemies the Greeks. Strabo gives but little help to those who try to understand what manner of men the Messapians were; and it is only in the pages of Athenaeus that we can glean anything of human interest.

He represents them as luxurious and effeminate, but we may gather from the long-continued opposition they were able to maintain to the Tarentine armies that some of them were brave and skilful soldiers. Perhaps the words of Athenæus which refer to their luxury should be regarded as applicable rather to the dwellers in the cities near the coast than to the northern and inland tribes.

BALETIUM.

About twelve miles south of Brundusium, near the village of Pietro Vernotico, are the remains of an ancient town which issued silver coins about 350 B.C. bearing the legends ΦΑΛΕΘΑΣ, and ΒΑΛΕΘΑΣ. It was mentioned by Pliny, in his list of cities, as between Lupia and Caelium, he spells it Balesium (lib. III.xi). In the Tabula it is spelt Valentia (Itin. Hierosol., p. 609) and Valetium in Mela (II.4).

The site is still called by the natives Baleso, or Valesio, and they still call the old Roman road which passes through the site the Via Trajana. Vases, inscriptions, and other remains of the old city have been dug up on the spot.

The circuit of the ancient walls shew it was a very small town. It is mentioned by Galateus (de situ Iapygia, pp. 73, 74), and by Romanelli (vol. II, p. 79).

Garrucci thought the name Baletium was derived from the name Phalanthus, and the spelling of the name on the coins with ⊕ favours this idea.

The coins of Baletium are extremely rare, only four specimens are known to Numismatists; two of these are in the Cabinet at Naples, and the other two in the Cabinet de Luynes at Paris. Each Cabinet possesses a Didrachm and a Tetrobol of this city. The coins at Naples were bought for that Museum at the sale of the Nervegna collection at Rome, in 1907, and were found near Brundusium. Those at Paris were bought from Jules Sambon, who found them near Luppia in Calabria. They were illustrated in Plate XV of the Revue numismatique, 1859. The figure of Taras is there shown as of very barbarous workmanship, more like a monkey than a man. It is a didrachm weighing 118 grains.

The coins in the Naples Cabinet are illustrated by photographs in the Sale Catalogue of the Nervegna Collection. (p. 19, figures 235, 236.)

This didrachm weighs 7 grammes. 92 i.e. 122 grains. The figure of Taras is much better in execution, but still evidently a Messapian copy of Greek work. The Tetrobol at Naples weighs 2 grammes. 58 i.e. 39.40 grains.

I. Didrachm. Obv. Taras on a dolphin, to right, followed by a small dolphin, border of dots. ϠΑΦΞΛΑϝ.

Rev. Same legend, a dolphin, globule and crescent, in the field ΓΕ: a plain border.

II. Tetrobol. Obv. A dolphin, and around ⊏Ⱶ ϠΑΦΛΑΒ.

Rev. A crescent, above ⊦Ε: below ϠΑΦΛΑΒ.

The characters or letters which form the legends on these coins of Baletium are archaic, and belong to an age earlier than that at which the coins were issued. Similar legends are found on the coins of other cities in Magna Graecia, as for instance on these of Croton. It is thought that in some cases the ancient forms of the letters may be accounted for by the engraver copying the inscription on some well-known old statue or work of art.

Dr Head in the Historia Numorum (p. 90) gives the date 443 B.C. as the period at which the change from the older characters to the newer took place in S. Italy and in the Dictionnaire des Antiquités of Daremberg et Saglio, under the word Alphabet, the eighty-seventh Olympiad i. e. from 432-429 B.C. is given as the period during which the change took place in the Greek Alphabet. In the year 403 B.C. the second year of the ninety-fourth Olympiad the Ionian alphabets was adopted generally.

The letter ϝ is the so-called δίγαμμα representing the sounds of f or v but more strongly.

The letter ⊕ is the older form of the Θ with the "th" sound.

The letter Ϡ is the old form of Ι, with the sound of i.

The presence of these archaic letters on a coin of the Messapians may indicate that writing was used among them at any rate for inscriptions before the conquest of the land by the Tarentines.

The shape of the letters on coin legends is not a certain sign of the date of their production.

BRUNDUSIUM.

The coins of this well known city are all Roman; none of the coins of the period before the establishment of the Roman colony have been preserved, although from the fact that coins were issued by the native cities in the neighbourhood in the fourth century before Christ we may feel sure that a native mint existed also in this city.

It was only 44 miles from Tarentum, and from the Roman types being those of Tarentum, Taras on the dolphin, we may imagine that if any earlier coins were issued they also bore that type.

The name of the city was derived from the shape of the port, which was thought to resemble a stag's head, called by the Messapians Brention or Brentesion. From Strabo (VI.282) we learn. "It is said that a colony of Cretans settled in Brentesium, but the tradition varies, some say they were those who came with Theseus from Cnossus (about 1323 B.C.) others that they were some out of Sicily who had come with Japax; they agree however in saying that they did not abide there but went thence to Botiaea. At a later period, when the state was under a monarch, it lost a large portion of its territories, which was taken by the Lacedemonians who came over under Phalanthus; notwithstanding this the Brundusians received him when he was expelled from Tarentum, and honoured him with a splendid tomb at his death. They possess a district of superior fertility to that of the Tarentines, for its soil is light, still it is fruitful, and its honey and wools are amongst the most esteemed: further the harbour of Brentesium is superior to that of Tarentum, for many havens are protected by the single entrance, and rendered perfectly smooth, many bays being formed within it, so that it resembles in fashion the antlers of a stag, whence its name, for the place together with the city is exceedingly like the head of a stag, and in the Messapian language the stag's head is called Brentesium; while the port of Tarentum is not entirely safe both on account of its lying very open and of certain shallows near its head".

Justin (III, iv) in telling the story of Phalanthus says "But after several years their leader Phalanthus in a sedition being forced into banishment, betook himself to Brundusium whither the old Tarentines being driven from their homes had retired".

The city never received a colony of Greeks, and remained the chief port and city of the Japygi until it was conquered by the Romans. It was in the year 267 B.C. that the Romans first attacked Brundusium (Zonarus, VIII, 7).

But though they took the city in that year they did not send a colony to possess it until 244 B.C. according to Livy (Epit. XIX) "Two colonies were established, at Fregenæ and Brundusium in the Sallentine territories".

Velleius Paterculus (I, 14) informs us "when Torquatus and Sempronius were consuls, Brundusium was occupied with a colony" He says it was three years before the games of Flora were instituted.

Florus (I, 20) says "The Sallentines shared the fate of the people of Picenum, and Brundusium the chief city of that country, with its famous harbour, was taken by Marcus Atilius. In this contest Pales the goddess of shepherds demanded of her own accord a temple as the price of victory". This was the same Atilius who consecrated the Temple of Concord in Rome (Livy, XXIII, 22.)

In the first Illyrian war in 229 B.C. the Romans assembled their fleet at Brundusium (Pol. II, 11) and in the second Punic war this was their chief naval station from which to oppose Philip of Macedon. (Livy, XXIII, 48, XXIV, 10).

Hannibal in vain attempted to take the city, and Brundusium was one of the eighteen colonies which supplied men and means with which to assist the army (XXV, 22, XXVII, 10).

It became the port from which all the Roman armies which conquered Greece and the east started, and to which they returned in triumph.

The coins of Brundusium have been divided into three classes by Mommsen (Hist. Mon. Rom., éd. Blacas, Vol. III, pp. 367-369). This classification is also given by Dr Head (Hist. Num., p. 43).

"Series II B.C. 217-200 Uncial wt, consists of the Triens oooo. Quadrans ooo, Sexans oo, Uncia o". Mommsen explains that coins of semiuncial weight were widely struck in Italy, outside Rome, before 89 B.C., and that the Lex Papiria of that year was in effect merely the legal authorization of the currency of already existing local issues of semiuncial weight, and of the issue in future of these light coins at Rome itself. In regard to the coins of Brundusium it would only be possible to draw a hard and fast line between the three series by the examination of a much larger collection of these coins than that in the British Museum.

COINS OF BRUNDUSIUM.

The coinage began to be issued in 245 B.C. when the city was made a colony.

There are two series of coins which we can distinguish by their weights alone, as the types are similar in each series.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF MEDALLISTS

Coin, Gem, and Seal Engravers, Ancient and Modern, with References to their Works.

ROETTIERS (ROETTIER, or ROTIER), JOHN (or JAN). (Flem.). Eldest son of Philip Roettiers, Medallist and Goldsmith of Antwerp, by his wife Elizabeth Thermés, was born at Antwerp (?) on 4. July 1631. He learned the art of medal-engraving and stone cutting with his father, and his first signed productions are dated from 1656 (?)

From Mr. W. Wroth's biographical notice of the artist in Dict. Nat. Biog. (XLIX, 99) I extract the following particulars : —

"In 1661 John Roettiers and his brother Joseph (and subsequently the third brother, Philip) were invited to England by Charles II. to work at the English mint. According to Walpole (Anecdotes of Painting, II, 184), their father had lent money to Charles during his exile, and had been promised employment for his sons. The letters patent appointing the three Roettiers engravers at the mint state that they were employed on account of the King's long experience of their great skill and knowledge 'in the arts of graveing and cutting in stone' (see Cat. Treasury Papers, 1697-1701-2, pp. 437-438).

"In January and February 1662 John Roettiers and Thomas Simon (q. v.) were ordered to engrave dies for the new 'milled' money in gold and silver, but, 'by reason of a contest in art between them', they could not be brought to an agreement. They therefore submitted patterns for gold 'Unites', and for silver 'Crowns'. Simon produced his splendid 'Petition Crown', but his rival's work was preferred, and John Roettiers was entrusted with the preparation of the coinage, and on 19. May 1662 received a grant of the office of one of the Chief-engravers of the mint.

'Roettiers had been already at work upon medals commemorating the Restoration, and he produced many important medals throughout the reign of Charles II. In February 1666-7 he was directed to make a new great Seal of the kingdom of Great Britain, completed at a cost of 246 l. 3 s. 2 d. Joseph Roettiers, John's principal assistant at the mint, left England in or before 1680, and in 1682 became engraver-general of the French mint. He died at Paris in 1703. James Roettiers, John's second son, who rendered assistance to his father at the mint in place of Joseph Philip Roettiers was officially connected with the English mint as an engraver till February 1684, but he was absent (at any rate temporarily) in the Low Countries from about 1673, and afterwards became engraver-general of the mint of the king of Spain in the Low Countries. Norbert Roettiers, John's third son, assisted his father after Philip's departure from England. John, Joseph, and Philip Roettiers appear to have originally received an annual allowance of 325 l. divided between them. On 7. April 1669 they were granted by warrant a yearly pension of 450 l. (i. e. 150*l.* each). John continued to receive the 450 l. after his brothers had left the mint, but he had to petition more than once for arrears of payment.

"John Roettiers produced the official Coronation medals of James II., Mary, 1685, and William and Mary, 1689, but he was not actively employed after the death of Charles II. In January 1696-7 it was discovered that dies for coins of Charles II. and James II. had been abstracted by labourers at the mint, and had been handed over by them to coiners in the Fleet prison, who used the dies for striking 'Guineas' of James II. on gilded blanks of copper. A committee of the House of Commons reported on 2. February 1696-7 that John Roettiers, who occupied 'the graver's house' at the Tower, was responsible for the custody of the dies, and was an unfit custodian, inasmuch as he was a violent papist, and 'will not nor ever did own the king (William III.), or do any one thing as a graver since the revolution'. Roettiers appears to have been removed from his office about this time, and to have taken up his residence in Red Lion Square, London. In his later years he suffered from the stone and from 'a lameness in his right hand'. He died in 1703, and was buried in the Tower.

"John Roettiers married, in 1658, Catherine Prost, by whom he had five daughters and three sons: John (b. 1661), James (b. 1663) and Norbert (b. 1605).

"John Roettiers's usual signature on medals is 'J. R.' in monogram; he also signs : ROTI.; ROETTI.; IAN. R.; JOAN. ROTI. Little is known of his work as a Gem-engraver. Walpole (Anecdotes, &c., II, 187) mentions a cornelian seal by him with the heads of Mars and Venus. Many dies and puncheons executed by John Roettiers and his relatives were purchased from the Roettiers family by a Mr. Cox, and were by him sold in 1828 to Matthew Young, the coin dealer, who, after striking some impressions for sale, presented them in 1829 to the British Museum.

"John Roettiers was one of the best engravers ever employed at the English mint. Evelyn (Diary, 20 July 1678) refers to him as 'that excellent graver... who emulates even the ancients in both metal and stone'; and Pepys (Diary, 26. March 1666), who visited Roettiers at the Tower, declares that he there saw 'some of the finest pieces of work, in embossed work, that ever I did see in my life, for fineness and smallness of the images thereon'. On 11. October 1687 Henry Slingsby (ex-master of the mint) offered Pepys his collection of Roettiers's medals. The "Great Britannia" (FELICITAS BRITANNIÆ) was valued by Slingsby at 4 l. 10 s., and the other medals at sums from 10 s. to 3 l. 4 s. a piece".

The following is a list of Roettiers's principal medals, which are all subsequent to the Restoration : Archbishop Laud, executed, 10. Jan. 1645 (signed : Roti : f.); — Giles Strangways, 1648 (obv. Bust to r.; signed : IAN. R. F.; ℞. The White Tower of London; dies in the British Museum); — Memorial of Charles I., 1649 (obv. Bust to r.; signed R (mon.); ℞. Hand from heaven holding celestial crown; two varieties); — Charles II. landing at Dover, 1660 (obv. Bust of Charles II. to r. : signed : R (mon.); ℞. Ship approaching the coast). This is probably the first medal executed by John Roettiers in this country. — Restoration, 1660, 'Britanniae' (obv. Bust of Charles II. to r.; ℞. Hercules, Minerva, Peace and Mercury around altar behind which is Prudence; ex. BRITANNIÆ); — Restoration, 1660, 'Felicitas Britanniae' (obv. Bust of Charles II., said to be by Joseph Roettiers; ℞. Justice, accompanied by Hercules and Pallas, presenting olive-branch to Britannia; ex. : FELICITAS BRITANNIÆ. 29. MAII. 1660; illustrated). One of the finest medals by Roettiers[1]. (The dies of this medal have passed through my hands. A former owner has issued restrikes, which are easily recognized by rust marks.); — Earl of Craven, 1660; — Marriage Medals of Charles II. and Catherine, 1662, in silver and in gold — probably the 'golden medal' commemorated by Waller'; — St. Catherine, 1662 (obv. Bust of Queen Catherine; ℞. St. Catherine; unsigned, but probably by John Roettiers; illustrated); — Naval Reward, 1665 (℞. PRO. TALIBVS. AVSIS. Charles II., as a Roman general, standing on the sea shore, viewing a naval engagement; three varieties; die of obv. in British Museum); — Duke of York; Naval Action, 1665 (obv. Bust of the Duke of York; signed : Roetti. F.; ℞. Naval engagement); — Pattern coin, or Medal :

1. I have a note copied from a Ms in M. Alphonse de Witte's library, in which it is stated : "La famille a constaté que la tête de Charles II, sur cette médaille, est par Joseph Roettiers."

Pattern Farthing in gold, 1665.

British currency on this Pattern Farthing. John Roettiers copied it from its antique prototype on a medallion of Commodus, and earlier bronze coins of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius. Frances Stewart, the later Duchess of Richmond, Charles II.'s favourite, sat to the artist for the model of Britannia [1].

R/. of Medallion of Commodus, circ. A.D. Enlargment of R/. of Farthing, 1665.

" The figure of Britannia which John Roettiers modelled from Frances Stewart is the first Britannia to appear in the English coinage since that upon the famous medallion of the Emperor Commodus. It was first seen in a gold " pattern " struck from the dies made for a new farthing in 1665, the date which is shown beneath the head of Charles II. on the obverse of the coin I reproduce. It was modelled, therefore, when the lovely Frances, "la plus jolie fille du monde", was in the first flush of her beauty at Court, two years before her marriage to the Duke of Richmond. It is, in my opinion, impossible to compare it with the Commodus medallion without believing that Roettiers deliberately took the Roman design and treated it in his own way with a new model. There are many resemblances, but the slight differences are even more convincing. The Roman standard becomes an olive branch, the spear is slightly more upright, the helmet beneath the shield becomes a heraldic flourish, the bosom is even more undraped than in the first design for the medal of two years later, which was struck to commemorate the Peace of Breda.

" It will be noticed that the dominion of the seas was announced in the new farthing with the legend " Quattuor Maria Vindico ". It is, therefore, quite intelligible that these farthings did not widely circulate in 1665 and 1666; for not only did Louis XIV. openly express his annoyance at this bombast, but the Dutch sailed up to Chatham and burnt our ships at anchor. After that the motto became descredited. " I hear of no supply ", says Lord Lucas somewhat bitterly, speaking in the House in 1671, " except it be of copper farthings, and that is the metal that is to vindicate, according to the inscription on it, the dominion of the four seas. " Another criticism that might be made is on the somewhat inelegant posture of the undraped right leg. This Roettiers altered both in the two designs for the Breda medal, and in the halfpenny of 1672, 3, and 5 [1] ".

Copper. Pattern Halfpennies (Britannia type), undated, 1672, etc.; — Pattern Farthings, 1665, and other dates.

As already mentioned, John Roettiers' first association with the Royal Mint dates from 1661, when he worked under Rawlins, until the latter's death; in 1670, he became Chief-engraver, and was assisted first by his brothers Joseph (1670-73) and Philip (1670-78) and later by his sons James (1690-1697) and Norbert (1690-1695). It is therefore impossible to know which dies John Roettiers cut himself. Mr. Grueber states that Jan Roettiers cut the dies for the milled money of Charles II. in all metals. The coins issued between 1670 and 1697 may safely be ascribed to members of the Roettiers family, during their activity in England.

ROETTIERS, JOHN (II) (Flem.). Eldest son of John Roettiers, was born about 1661 in London, but does not appear to have been a Medallist. Mr. W. Wroth, in his notice of John Roettiers Senr. (Dict. Nat. Biog., XLIX, 100) states: "The committee of the House of Commons concerning the abstraction of the dies reported (2. February 1696-7) that this younger John was suspected of participation in the conspiracy of Rookwood and Bernado, the 'assassinators', having at that time provided himself of horses and arms at his own house in Essex, where he entertained very ill company, to the great terror of the neighbourhood'. A warrant for high treason was out against him, 'but he fled from justice."

ROETTIERS, JOSEPH (Flem.). Son of Philip Roettiers, and brother of John (1631-1703), and Philip (1640-1718), and also a Medallist and Coin-engraver, born at Antwerp, 1. August 1635, died at Paris, 12. September 1703. He learned the art of die-sinking with his father, and came to London, about 1670; from 1670 to 1672 or 73 he worked at the Royal Mint, as Assistant-engraver. In 1673 (Mr. Wroth says in or before 1680) he went over to France (at the invitation of Colbert), where he became naturalized, and in 1682 he was appointed Engraver-general of the French coins, in succession to Varin. His first wife, Elizabeth Nilis (a sister or relative of the engraver Nilis) died at the Galeries du Louvre, 16. October 1680; he married again, 12. June 1690; the name of his second wife, with whom he appears to have been living since 1674, was Helen Stonehouse. By the first wife he had four sons and a daughter; the eldest son, Philip, is not to be confused with Philip (III), son of Joseph's brother Philip (II) (vide Guiffrey, Rev.

num., 1889, p. 450); another son, Georges, became Engraver at the Paris Mint. By Helen Stonehouse, the artist had three sons and three daughters; the fourth child being Joseph Charles, who on the death of Norbert Roettiers became Engraver-general in 1727.

Joseph Roettiers was appointed Engraver at the Paris Mint in 1674, and Engraver-general in 1682; he obtained an appartment in the Galeries du Louvre in 1679, and was admitted a Member of the Académie royale de peinture et de sculpture, 30. January 1683, on the presentation of a portrait (in intaglio) of Colbert, intended as a Seal for the Academy.

It is said that previous to his leaving for France, his brother John advised him not to accept the office of Engraver-general without the coining-press. He however worked without the press for the first year, and Colbert having died in the meantime, he was told that the King intended to farm out the Press for a sum of 20 000 Livres, which was due to him. The Engraver's wife dissuaded him from accepting, and immediately De Launay, goldsmith to the King, acquired the right, thus securing a considerable yearly income.

Guiffrey gives extracts from Mint accounts, mentioning payments made to Roettiers for dies and puncheons executed by him.

Joseph Roettiers' medals are usually signed : R. or J. R. (mon).

Joseph Roettiers, who obtained the title of "Premier graveur de l'Histoire en Médailles" was one of the first artists to contribute to Louis XIV'.s series of medals, which was only begun in 1680.

There is a Portrait of the Medallist by Largillière.

ROETTIERS, JOSEPH CHARLES (Flem.). Son of Joseph Roettiers and Helen Stonehouse, born in 1692 (or 1693). He learned die-engraving with his father, and his cousin, Norbert Roettiers. In 1711 he obtained the second prize of sculpture at the Académie royale, and was admitted a member of that body in 1717, on the presentation of a portrait of the King, intended for a medal of the Academy. From 1715, he took the title of 'Graveur des médailles du Roi', Portrait-medal ot J. C. Roettiers, by J. C. Hedlinger.

and a month after the death of Norbert Roettiers, Engraver-general to the Paris Mint, he was appointed to that office, 18. June 1727. He married in 1716 Catherine Hérault, by whom he had three children, two daughters and a son, the future medallist, Charles Norbert (q. v.); after his wife's death in 1753, he married a second time, Jeanne Hermant (17. November 1753-† 1780). The date of his death is given as 14. March 1779. He appears to have retired into private life some time before, and possibly through ill-health.

The medals signed J. C. R. are the only ones which may safely be ascribed to Joseph Charles Roettiers. A difficulty arises in connection with the signature R. fils, or R. filius, R. f., and Roettiers filius. Guiffrey is of the opinion that before 1731, Joseph Charles, wishing to distinguish his works from those of his father, Joseph, signed thus, but that after 1731 he signed I. C. R. Advielle, on the contrary, thinks that this signature entirely belongs to Charles Norbert, who on a medal of 1770 signs: C. N. Roettiers filius.

Why should not George, Joseph Charles' elder brother, who was employed as Engraver at the Medal Mint, have also signed R. filius, as he began cutting dies when his father, Joseph, was still living. And, as Guiffrey remarks, Jacques R. might equally have signed Roettiers filius.

ROETTIERS DE LA BRETÊCHE (or BERTAICHE), JOSEPH CHARLES (Flem.). Second son of Georges Roettiers, and Marie Claude Hermant, born at Paris, 12. January 1722; Engraver (Graveur particulier) at the Paris Mint, from 1748 to 1759. He married in 1747 Marie-Anne Bonnin. The date of his death is not known (Rondot gives it as 1803), but during the French Revolution he was arrested on 5. Frimaire an XI, for having in his possession silver forks and spoons on which the arms had not been effaced and a pocket-book containing notes on the King and the Constitution; he was however released on the following 21. Ventôse.

None of his productions are known, but he no doubt cut many of the dies for the small currency issued during his tenure of office.

ROETTIERS, NORBERT (Flem.). Third son of John Roettiers, and grandson of Philip Roettiers of Antwerp; was probably born at Antwerp (or London) in 1665 (Guiffrey gives the date as 1664, and Advielle, 1666). He was apprenticed to his father, with whom he worked at the Royal Mint, London, from about 1684. In 1690 he obtained, together with his brother James, the appointment of Assistant-engraver, in which capacity he acted until 1695, when he left England for France. There he attached himself to the Stuarts at St. Germain, and thanks to the protection and help of his uncle, Joseph Roettiers, then in high favour at Paris, he soon obtained employment at the French mint. On the death of Joseph Roettiers, in 1703, he was appointed Engraver-general of the French coins, a post which he retained until his own death, at Choisy-sur-Seine, 18. May 1727. He married twice, first, Elizabeth Isard, and secondly, Winifred Clarke, daughter of an Englishman living at St. Germain, and niece of the Duke of Marlborough. His eldest son, James (IV) Roettiers, born at St. Germain, became goldsmith to Louis XVI., and the Elder Pretender stood sponsor at his christening. Norbert Roettiers had been granted letters of naturalization in 1719, and in 1722 he became a member of the Académie royale de peinture et de sculpture, "He was", says Mr. W. Wroth, "an ardent Jacobite, and, according to Walpole (Anecdotes of painting, II, 186), was suspected by persons with 'penetrating eyes' of having introduced a small satyr's head within the head of William III. on the English copper coinage of 1694. The existence of the satyr is more than doubtful, and, in any case, James, and not Norbert, Roettiers had the principal hand in the coinage".

The elder Pretender appointed Norbert Roettiers "Engraver of the Mint", and the artist officially described himself as 'Graveur général des monnaies de France et d'Angleterre'. After his departure from England he executed a number of dies for coins, medals, and medalets for the exiled Stuart family (1697-1720) and their adherents. In 1709 he made the English 'Crown-piece', with the effigy and titles of James III. (Numismatic Chronicle, 1879, p. 135, Pl. v, 3; illustrated) and the Pattern Shilling, or Guinea, 1716 (loc. cit., p. 136, Pl. v, 2). The Crown is unique (Brit. Museum); also the Scottish 'coins' (1716) with the pretender's title of 'James VIII': Pattern Dollar, or Sixty-shilling piece (loc. cit, p. 137, Pl. v, 5; illustrated), and Pattern Shilling, or Quarter Dollar loc. cit., EPIGRAFIA MONETALE DEI III·VIR·R·P·C.

Data la specialità dei miei studi fatti di positivismo e sperimentalismo, è sempre un po difficile di completamente spiegarmi in uno scritto, a meno che si intercalasse una quantità considevole di clichés presi sul vero mentre lavoro. E perciò parecchie cose non le posso stampare. Ma al prossimo Congresso di Numismatica a Bruxelles a la presenza di tutti, mostrerò alcune delle mie teorie, accettando bene inteso quel contradditorio che mi si volesse fare per amore della verità scientifica; essendo mio vangelo, che delle parole è facile metterne molte una in fila a l'altra e dare loro parvenza di verità, mentre invece i fatti sono fatti. Permettetemi dunque da le colonne della diffusa Monthly, di impegnarmi a soddisfare rigorosamente i miei assunti scientifici, a Bruxelles, anche per soddisfare a la grande cortesia di cui à voluto onorarmi il Comitato ordinatore di quel Congresso.

Fra le cose che colà toccherò, vi è la epigrafia monetale antica. E qui mi occupo in parte di quella dei III vir reip. cost.

Debbo a la grande cortesia dell'on. H. Grueber del British Museum se posso di molte cose dare a la scienza la spiegazione. E quindi i miei ringraziamenti a l'illustre e cortese scienziato, sono anche in nome della scienza. Così anche al Cav. Serafini del Medagliere Vaticano.

L'epigrafia monetale dei triumviri è la più sconnessa sotto il punto di vista tecnico, nonchè di quello stilistico e persino ortografico!

Ed io sfido il buonsenso a pretendere il contrario, pensando ai tempi movimentati, a gli artisti mediocrissimi ed anche certamente ignoranti, non solo, ma pensando che quella monetazione avveniva forse in officine campali, e non in officine regolarmente costituite.

Nella Rassegna Italiana di Numismatica, spiegai già come avvenne il supposto errore di M. Antonio f. i. in cui le f paiono e.

Ora quì pubblico un errore ortografico non voluto, ossia nato per caso, e non per ignoranza letteraria. Ma ciò vale a provare che è assolutamente inadatto il volere giudicare le monete unicamente con criteri stilistici, e peggio ancora, condannare le monete per possibili errori nello andamento di un naso, di un labbro, di capelli, o di una lettera.

Ad esempio: mettiamo l'ipotesi che la moneta quì sotto effigiata fosse unica e in oro e di estrema importanza.

Credete voi che quel battesimo di BARRAT, invece di BARBAT non influerebbe a rendere titubanti una quantità di persone?

E la evidente dissonanza tra la leggenda che attornia la testa di Antonio e quella di Ottaviano, non sarebbe motivo di indisporre l'occhio a giudicare?

Teniamo presente, che io parlo come di una moneta unica e di estrema importanza.

Vi à di più: i capelli di Antonio trattati a doppio filetto, mentre quelli di Ottaviano sono trattati a un solo filo, sarebbero motivo di perplessità. Il perlinato del dritto, non è eguale a quello del rovescio...

Ma se invece, la moneta fosse sottomessa a l'esame tecnico, si vede che lo stesso cesello à scolpiti i capelli di Antonio e quelli di Ottaviano. In questi il cesello si è affondato di più nel conio, e in quelli si è mantenuto più superficiale.

L'esame tecnico dice che anche le palline degli occhi sono prodotte da la stessa boutirolle o punzone a testina tonda. In Ottaviano più affondato, in Antonio di meno, nella leggenda di Antonio, e in quella di Ottaviano è lo stesso cesello che à lavorato e la profondita a cui è giunto è eguale. Solo che in quella di Antonio essendo le lettere più corte, pare più rilevata.

E quella R invece di un B nel nome di Barbatus, è una svista occorsa per caso. Tanto vero, che dopo fatta la leggenda ed essendosi accorto del fatto, lo scultore non si curò ad aggiustare bene la lettera e darle l'apparenza di una B, ciò ches arebbe stato facile. Ma diede appena un colpettino di cesello a guisa di una virgoletta quasi invisible e lasciò correre. Se la moneta fosse stata unica, quanto avrebbe dato da pensare quel Barrat?

A scanso di equivoci poi è bene dire che questa moneta è del Museo Britannico, ed a me l'impronta è stata favorita da l'on. Grueber. È bene che io dica ciò. Io ò tanti buoni amici che ben volentieri potrebbero pensare male.

Ma a parte che i coni furono prodotti nel dritto e nel rovescio, con un solo cesello, e un solo punteruolo a testa tonda, la moneta à le stigmate che, come invariabilmente è di tutta la monetazione antica, le figure sono tutte principiate da un solo lato. È questo un grande segreto della monetazione antica.

Non furono certo i Becker, i Padovano, e tanti altri incisori di coni, che conobbero e praticarono questo segreto degli antichi monetieri, e tanto meno poi usarono il cesello spinto a martello.

Essi adoprarono il bulino e spinto a mano! Inoltre gli effetti, li ottennero a punzoni il più che poterono. Ciò che è ben lontano da la semplicità antica che come ò detto della moneta presentata, ottenne un paio di coni con un solo cesello e un solo punteruolo.

Poteva avvenire che durante il lavoro il cesello si spuntasse, o perdesse l'agilità del taglio. E allora una nuova arrotatura alterava un poco la sua grossezza, nulla altro.

E anche di ciò ce ne offre degli esempi la epigrafia dei III VIR R.P.C. Ma il modo di adoperare il cesello era però sempre lo stesso. Ed in questo stà la differenza tra gli antichi e ... i moderni.

Sorvolo su l'errore in cui incorse il duca di Luynes, nel supporre che i coni fossero lavorati al tornio lapidario. Errore scusabile perchè il Luynes non lavorava da sè, e non gli venivano quindi a la mente i quesiti che vengono quando l'archeologo lavora da sè a la ricerca dei misteri della antichità.

Non vi è cosa più semplice, più facile della monetazione antica, ma nello stesso tempo più difficile a scorgere a prima vista.

Ad esempio: à dato un gran da fare, l'attribuire date monete a date officine, e a parte le sigle e i contrassegni evidenti, anche quì si è ricorso a lo stile. Facciamo l'ipotesi che uno scultore di coni passasse da una officina a l'altra, è egli presumibile che costui di punto in bianco cambiasse stile? Io credo, no.

Ma alcune differenze tecniche de officina ad officina, nei bassi tempi, esiste. E su queste differenze c'è da studiare.

Ormai questo articolo è già un po troppo lungo, e debbo limitarmi sperando parlarne un altra volta.

Accennerò di volo che mentre dai tempi di Maso Finiguerra il bulino assume la forma odierna, gli antichi davano ai loro ceselli la forma seguente

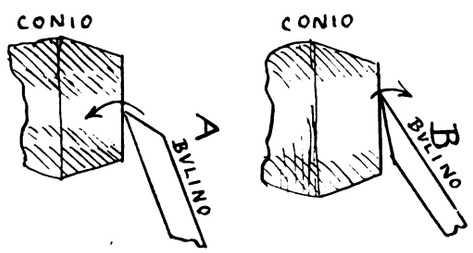
e ciò necessariamente per molte ragioni tecniche, non esclusa quella che con la forma della fig. n° 2, il cesello si sarebbe rotto alla punta quasi ad ogni colpo, per la sua forma tutta ad un lato (battendovi sopra), e tendeva ad inabissarsi nel metallo (A) o a non penetrarvi (B) se tenuto a rovescio.



Queste sono constatazioni di fatto che si osservano solo lavorando e sperimentando. Orbene nello studio tecnico della moneta, avremo sempre una guida sicura, poichè tanto il modesto quanto il valente artista adoprano la stessa tecnica e gli stessi utensili, mentre la maggiore o minor valentia dello artista avrà un serio impulso sul risultato stilistico del lavoro.

Ed io a chi voglia fare uno studio serio di tecnica, consiglio di studiare con minuziosa cura la epigrafia dei tempi repubblicani, giù giù a quella imperiale fino ai bizantini, in cui abbiamo un ritorno a le forme letterali della moneta consolare, ma con una lieve differenza di tecnica.

MATTEO PICCIONE.

MEDAGLIA DI ANTONIO LODRON CANONICO DI SALISBURGO E PASSAVIA, SIGNORE DI CASTELLANO NEL TRENTINO.

Nel museo imperiale di Vienna, ricco di cimelli preziosi d'ogni epoca, si conserva una medaglia, unica a quanto mi consta, appartenente alla nobile famiglia feudataria trentina dei Lodron. Mi fu gentilmente communicata dal direttore di quel museo, dottor Carlo Domanig, che qui ricordo con grato animo.

Ricorda Antonio Lodron, come canonico di Salisburgo, della vita del quale gli storici ben poco conoscono.

Dr. ANTONIVS COMES LODRONI CANON·SALZB· Æ·54.

Busto del Lodron rivolto a sinistra in abito di canonico col berretto. Nel campo ai lati della testa 15—91.

℞. NIL DESPERANDVM. Il Redentore colla sinistra alzata in mare procelloso dirige la barca, circondata da pesci e sirene, verso il faro. Questa scena rappresenta la chiesa guidata dal Redentore alla luce della verità.

Argento, diametro 34 mm., peso 27 grammi.

Antonio era secondo genito di Agostino Lodron e di Maddalena Bagarotto, della linea dei Lodron di Castellano e Castelnuovo; nacque del 1537 nel castello di Castellano (Trentino) e s'avvio al sacerdozio. Fu dapprima investito del beneficio di San Cristoforo e di Sant' Antonio di Pomarolo, rimasto vacante per la morte di suozio Alessandro. Si recò a Vienna intento ad apprendere la lingua latina e vi rimase fino a tutto l'anno 1558. In quest' anno per i buoni uffici del barone Cristoforo de Lamberg, decano della metropolitana di Salisburgo, ottenne la carica di canonico in quella cattedrale. Si trasferì indi ad Ingolstadt, dove per tre anni studiò a quell' università, e vi rimase fino al 1561.

Fu investito della parocchia di Villa Lagarina, dopo la morte del conte d'Arco, dal cardinale Cristoforo Madruzzo, in data 22 aprile 1561 e ne pigliò possesso ai 3 di gennaio dell' anno seguente.

Nel 1580 s'era recato a Roma, dove ebbe un' udienza dal papa Gregorio XIII, e ritornato nel febbraio 1581 portò secco, oltre ad altri privilegî, la bolla pontificia, che dispensava Antonio dalla residenza e gli accordava la facoltà di reggere la parocchia di Villa col mezzo di un vicario.

Morti i suoi due fratelli, Agostino e Felice, Antonio restò solo padrone del feudo di mero e misto impero di Castellano, nel quale vi esercitò il sommo potere.

Con atto dei 9 marzo 1604, il principe vescovo di Trento, Carlo Madruzzo, assegnava al conte Antonio le decime di Volano ed Aldeno, già possedute dai suoi predecessori. Antonio figura anche nelle investiture feudali dei beni aviti del 1558, 1579, 1590 e 1607.

Ebbe e sostenere una lunga lite coi suoi cugini Lodron di Castelnuovo per il feudo di Castellano, che come prete, essi dicevano, non poteva governare ne amministrare. La sentenza fu favorevole ad Antonio.

Il conte Antonio era stato elevato alla prima dignità nel capitolo della metropolitana di Salisburgo, cioè alla Prepositura, anzi era stato elevato alla dignità arcivescovile, che egli non accettò.

Nel tempo estivo o autunnale soggiornava colla sua corte nel castello di Castellano, dove ai 30 marzo 1604, a rogiti Vincenzo Figaroli, detava il suo testamento con codicillo in data 24 aprile, a favore delle sue sorelle, Giustina e Giulia, per i beni che possedeva a Salisburgo e Passavia, lasciando al cugino Nicolò Lodron quelli della Vallagarina col feudo di Castellano.

Il conte Antonio morì a Salisburgo il giorno 10 dicembre 1615, e con lui si estinse la linea dei Lodron di Castellano.

Rovereto nel febbraio 1910. Q. Perini.

PAPER-MONEY COLLECTING.

Although the late Herr L. Clericus of Magdeburg, well-known as an enthusiastic collector, had even in 1880, by publishing various highly interesting articles in different Journals, drawn public attention to the interest attached to collections of Paper-money and to the fact that this branch of Numismatics, representing monuments of the highest importance of bygone days from an historical point of view, might with all justification be called the handmaid of the Science, yet, notwithstanding, very few appeared to take an interest in collections of this kind.

Even now there are but few collections which are of any magnitude or are scientifically arranged, or upon which patience and industry have been carefully bestowed.

Therefore, in order to bring collectors in closer touch with each other, and in order to facilitate mutual exchange, it would seem desirable to form an Association, not only to guard the interests of collectors, but also to institute an active propaganda in a field which has up to now, received only too little attention.

In this way, much that would be of interest would come to the notice of collectors, and undoubtedly the interest in this question taken by the Trade, would be enlivened thereby.

If we consider the notes emitted by Law in the reign of Louis XV.; the assignats under Louis XVI.; the other Paper-moneys (Bons de Communes) of the Revolution, of Pichegru's invasion of Holland, of the different revolutions in Poland; the Siege-moneys of Italy and Hungary during the time of Garibaldi and Kossuth; the blockade-notes of Maintz, Colberg and of Erfurt; further, the Italian and Austrian assistance-money of 1848 and 1870; the old American moneys under the English Government of the 18th Century, and of the war of 1864, etc.; all notes of the various States and Banks of Germany up to 1875: lastly, all the small assistance-money (Vales) of the South American Republics, of Spain, of Portugal, etc.; and all those of other States which cannot be enumerated here, then only will it be possible to understand, not only how interesting, but also how important (considered from the artistic-historical standpoint) such a collection may become.

Therefore should this suggestion meet with a favourable reception by the fraternity of paper-money Collectors, I should be delighted to receive communications from them, which would enable an exchange of views on the subject of the above proposed Association.

Séance du 6 novembre.

M. Adrien Blanchet rappelle que, contrairement à ce qui a été dit, le vol commis au Musée Dutuit a été beaucoup plus considérable que les journaux ne l'avaient annoncé.

M. Blanchet signale ensuite plusieurs découvertes de monnaies gauloises et démontre que les moules monétaires romains trouvés récemment à Rezé (Loire-Inférieure) ne peuvent être que des instruments de faux monayeurs.

M. Bordeaux communique divers essais monétaires.

M. Béranger fait connaître deux jetons de Philippe V, avec les armes de Rouen, de frappe moderne, qui semblent être des pièces hybrides.

Le comte de Castellane communique un teston de Charles IX avec la marque de Bordeaux.

Geburtstag Schillers eine Schiller-Medaillen-Ausstellung. weiter wurde über eine Zeppelin-Medaille gesprochen (s. besonderen Artikel). Herr Dr. Will-Erlangen gab unter Vorlage einer grossen Anzahl Münzen ein sehr interessantes Bild über "die Entwicklung des Münzwesens von Karl dem Grossen bis zum Ende der fränkischen Kaiserzeit" und erntete dafür berechtigten allseitigen Beifall. Der Vorsitzende dankte dem unermüdlichen Mitgliede und Vortragenden noch besonders. In reicher Fülle wurden ferner von den Herren Stahl, Perge, A. Müller, Gebert Münzen und Medaillen zur Vorlage und Besprechung gebracht. Auf die Hauptversammlungen des Vereins sowie der Bayer. Num. Gesellschaft wurde aufmerksam gemacht.

* Die Bayerische Numismatische Gesellschaft begann am Montag, den 8. November, in ihrem herrlichen Sitzungssaal (Kavalier-Zimmer des Münchner Hauptbahnhofes) ihre Zusammenkünfte. Der Herr Vorsitzende, Staatsminister v. Frauendorfer, Exz. eröffnete die Sitzung mit warmer Begrüssung der erschienenen Fachgenossen. Herr. Dr. Buchenau besprach hierauf kurz die vorliegende Literatur. Herr Direktor Dr. Habich legte ein prächtiges Holzmodell einer Welser-Medaille der besten Zeit (aus dem Oldenburger Museum) und ein anderes schönes Porträt-medaillen-Holz-Modell (aus dem Kästner-Museum in Hannover), sowie schöne, alte und neue Medaillen aus dem Besitz des K. Münzkabinetts München vor und gab interessante Mitteilungen dazu. Herr Dr. Buchenau schilderte sodann seine Ferienreise, die er zu numismatischen Forschungen mitverwendet hat. Zuerst ging es nach Innsbruck (wo sich ein bisher unbekannter Kreuzer des Passauer Bischofs Ulrich III. von Nussdorf 1451/79 befindet), dann nach der alten Münzstadt Hall, nach Lienz, Villach, Graz. Hier ist besonders die in ihrer wertvollen Zusammensetzung noch gar nicht genug bekannte Sammlung des berühmten Forschers Luschins. Ausführliche Mitteilungen über die "Friesacher" fanden hier eine passende Stelle. Auch der Sammlung des Joanneums wurde besonders gedacht. Ueber Wiener-Neustadt ging es nach Wien. Herr Dr. J. Streber legte 2 wunderbar gezeichnete Bände Münzabbildungen, die von seinem Grossvater, dem hervorragenden Münzforscher Dr. Franz Streber-München stammen, vor, ein "Lexicon numismaticon iconographicon" das allseitig bewundert wurde, ferner keltische Münzen aus seiner Sammlung. Herr K. Medailleur Börsch brachte einige Arbeiten, die er in letzter Zeit gefertigt hat. Darunter die Medaille auf den verstorbenen Grossherzog Adolf von Luxemburg-Nassau, die ganz hervorragend gelungen ist. Weiter u. a. eine Medaille auf das 50 jährige Jubiläum der Schützengesellschaft des Kath. Gesellenvereins München; dies Stück ist auch deshalb interessant, weil Herr Börsch vor 25 Jahren beim Silberjubiläum des Vereins auch die Festmünze fertigte. Herr Obermünzmeister Riederer zeigte das neue 25 Pfennig-Stück. Herr Gebert-Nürnberg brachte die Hummelsche Plakette auf Graf Zeppelin, welche das Lob der Fachgenossen und auch die Anerkennung des Herrn Vorsitzenden fand. — Die nächsten sitzungen finden statt am 10 Januar (General-versammlung), 7. Februar, 7. März, 4. April und 2. Mai 1910.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.

Jan. 20. — Mr. Horace W. Monckton. V. P., in the chair. — Mr. J. T. Bennett-Poë was elected a Fellow.

Mr. H. A. Parsons exhibited a heavy half-groat of Edward IV., struck at Dublin, supposed to be unique; Mr. W. E. Marsh, a light groat of Henry VI.; and Mr. Monckton six Roman coins of the second century A.D. selected to illustrate the relation of the bronze to the copper coinage of the period. Mr. L. A. Lawrence showed a series of gold and silver coins of Edward IV. and Henry VI. to illustrate the paper of the evening.

Mr. F. A. Walters read a paper on 'The Restoration Coinage of Henry VI., 1470–71.' After a short historical introduction he proceeded to discuss the gold coinage of the period. On the restoration of Henry VI. the want of a gold coin corresponding to the reduced silver coinage was felt, and the noble was probably considered to be too closely identified with the house of York. The angel — the issue of which had actually been ordered in 1465, though very few specimens appear to have been struck — was adapted as the gold coin of Henry VI. Henry's badge of the fleur-de-lis and his initial replaced Edward's badge of the rose and sun, while the name of France was added to his titles. The chief new mint-marks were the plain cross (pierced or unpierced) and a rather large cross pattée. Angels were struck in large quantities at the London mint, and can be arranged in four classes according to the legends: the earliest reads HENRICUS DEI GRA, &c., FRANCIE; the second, HENRICUS .... FRANC; in the third and fourth classes the king's name is abbreviated to HENRICU and HENRIC respectively. Half-angels or angelets were also struck, similar to the angels, but having the reverse legend O CRUX TUA SPES UNICA. In silver every denomination from the groat to the farthing is now known of the London mint, though the groat alone can be called common. The silver coinage closely resembles Edward IV's. except in the name. The mint-marks on the groats are the cross pattée, the short cross fitchée, the plain cross (pierced or unpierced), and the fleur-de-lis. The half groat, penny, and halfpenny are rare, though several varieties of each are known, and Mr. Walters possesses a unique halfpenny of this coinage. At the Bristol mint several varieties of angel were issued, which Mr. Walters suggested were struck from dies made in Bristol, and not in London, as usually supposed. The groat is the only silver coin known of this mint, and eleven varieties were enumerated, giving a number of mint-marks differing from those of the London mint. Mr. Walters did not accept Mr. Packe's suggestion that certain gold coins should be ascribed to the York mint, and held that the only known York coins were the groat, which is common, and the half-groat, of which but two are known. Archbishop Nevill struck pennies at the Archiepiscopal mint during this period, having the lis and usual episcopal marks.

Among those who took part in the discussion was Mr. Lawrence, who pointed out the danger of laying too much stress on mint-marks, slight varieties of legends, &c., and held that Edward IV. must have struck many more angels than we know of, so that it was impossible to say that the noble was characteristic of Edward IV. or the angel of Henry VI. He also regarded it as certain that the dies for the provincial mints were engraved in London, and not at those mints.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.

Jan. 26. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — Mr. Arthur Peirce, H.B.M. Consul for Yucatan, and Mr. Bernard A. Quaritch were elected Members.

Mr. H. B. Earle Fox, before reading a paper introductory to a numismatic history of the first three Edwards, gave a brief account of the coins of those reigns, and showed that the old classification according to the abbreviated form ot the king's name was far from correct. Edward I., he stated, struck long-cross pennies bearing his father's name during the first seven years of his reign, but in 1279 issued the rare groats often misdescribed as patterns, pennies reading EDW REX ANGL DNS HYB, and farthings. Halfpennies were added a year later. Pennies reading EDWARD were struck in 1302, and the name was reduced to EDWAR and EDWA before the king's death. Edward II. used both these forms; and all varieties of abbreviation were found on the pennies of Edward III. Hence there was no rough-and-ready method ot separating the coins of the three kings, but each type could be satisfactorily placed in its chronological order.

The Director, Mr. Shirley Fox, gave an account of the work of the Research Committee, and submitted virtually complete mint-accounts of all the money coined at London and Canterbury from Edward I. to Richard III. He showed that the first-named king coined considerably over a million and a half pounds, Tower, of silver, representing some 386,400,000 pennies from these two mints alone. Among the later records was one for May and June, 1483, which showed that Edward V. coined as much as 49 lb. 10 oz., Tower, of gold and 433 lb. 3 oz. of silver. This was of special interest as no definite record of money having been struck in this reign had previously been known to exist.

Mr. Henry Garside exhibited and original prospectus for the first edition of Ruding's 'Annals of the Coinage'; also a set of the coinage issued for British Honduras in 1907, including the first nickel coins for that colony.

Mr. L. A. Lawrence showed a collection of American cents representing every year from 1793 to 1856, with the exceptions ot 1799, 1804, 1809, 1811. and 1815; a box of weights and scales dated 1595 for checking the European currency of the period; and a gilt seal with portrait of Queen Anne and legend INACVRAT above a curious figure as device.

Miss Helen Farquhar presented her collection of numismatic lantern-slides to the Society.

COINS OF MAGNA GRAECIA

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS.

(The Coinage of the Greek Colonies of Southern Italy).

1. Vol., 8vo, paper covers, 336 pp., with numerous illustrations in the text, one Map and a Chart.

"The Coins of Magna Græcia" contains information that certainly cannot be found elsewhere in English. A great deal more has been done than a mere digest of Sambon, Evans, and Lenormant, — there is plenty of independent work. English Collectors of Greek coins ought to be very grateful for the collection of so much good material, and most especially for the arrangement of everything in chronological periods, which are so much more satisfactory than the system of the volume on Italy of the British Museum Catalogue, the only volume that was accessible hitherto.".

GREEK COINS.

ΓΡΑ... GRAXA.

The coins of this city, the site of which has not yet been discovered, were attributed by Eckhel (Vol. I, p. 92) to Graviscæ, a town on the coast of Etruria. From the types and fabric, however, they must have been issued from a city in Calabria; moreover, they are found on the coast of the gulf of Tarentum.

They are small bronze pieces belonging to the Semuncial system or perhaps to the reduced uncial system if we regard them as slightly earlier than the year 9 B.C. (Millingen, Numismatique de l'Italie, pp. 148, 172). The British Museum Catalogue mentions them as the coins of an "uncertain town of Calabria" (p. 221). Garrucci says these coins are found in numbers near Fasano, especially near S.M. di Agnazzo. He does not think ΓΡΑ = Gnathia or Egnatia. On one of the coins found there the legend was ΓΡΑΞΑ not ΓΡΑ. Garrucci says it was in Apulia north of Brindisi. Millingen thought it was for ΓΡΑΙΑ ΚΑΛΛΙΠΟΛΙΣ, (Mela, XI, 4.) but the most probable site is Fasano.

HYRIA or ORRA.

Herodotus, in his account of the return of the Cretans from Sicily, records the story of the foundation of Hyria, the most ancient of the Iapygian cities, and as he wrote his history in Magna Graecia he would have the advantage of hearing local traditions.

"When they (the Cretans) were sailing along the coast of Iapygia a violent storm overtook them, and drove them ashore. As their ships were broken to pieces, and there appeared no means of returning to Crete, they thereupon founded the city of Hyria, and settled there, changing their name from Cretans to Messapian Iapygians, and becoming, instead of islanders, inhabitants of the continent. From the city of Hyria they founded other cities, which, a long time after, the Tarentines endeavouring to destroy signally failed" (VII, 170).

It seems at first sight strange that a seafaring people such as the Cretans should have chosen to build their city so far from the sea, as twenty miles from both Brundusium and Tarentum. The site was fifteen miles from the nearest sea beach along the bay of Tarentum.

The Appian way was afterwards made to pass Hyria, thus connecting it with Brundusium and Tarentum.

On the site of Hyria a modern town exists, called Oria, built on a low hill commanding an extensive view of the country around. No remnants of the ancient city now exist, but inscriptions in the Messapian dialect have been found, and bronze coins which are fairly common. Hyria was the headquarters of the opponents of the Tarentines, and the citizens seem to have resisted the luxury which rendered those of the coast cities effeminate. The coins of Hyria do not bear witness to the religion or life of the Messapians prevailing before the Roman conquest. Whether they ever issued silver coins, or had a mint before the issue of the bronze coins now known to us, we cannot tell.

The two deities whose heads appear on the coins are Pallas and Aphrodite and the only other obverse type is the head of a beardless warrior wearing a conical helmet, with a small crest very similar to one of the Italian helmets in the British Museum, in the case on the right-hand side of the entrance to the Numismatic Room. As the helmet is of the Italian form, and differs from the Greek helmet, we may regard the head as that of some legendary national hero, perhaps that of Iapyx. A strong national or civic feeling is thus expressed, at a time long after the Greeks and Romans had subdued their city.

The cult of Aphrodite is rare in South Italy, and may point to some connection with Corinth, the nearest city which used the head of this goddess as a coin type.

In the Tabula Peutinger there is evidence of the cult of Aphrodite being celebrated in Apulia about twenty miles north of the borders of Calabria.

"Gnatiæ VIII, ad Venesis VIII, Norve, leg. VI, Ehetium VIII, Celia VIII, leg. XI, Butuntos".

That is "Gnathia, Norba, Azetium, Caelia, Butuntum". The station marked "ad Venesis", between Gnatia and Norba, is on a hill now called Monte S. Pietro, and the Latin form for Aphrodite is only what we should expect in Roman Tabula. The distance of this temple from Hyria or Orra is only thirty-five miles.

The coin of Hyria bearing the head of Aphrodite shews there was also a temple to that goddess in Hyria of Calabria. At Poseidonia the cult of Aphrodite was known (cf. pp. 98 and 108 coins of Magna Graecia) and a head of this goddess appears on bronze coins of Laus. The dolphin which appears on coins of Calabria may be regarded as an emblem of Aphrodite as well as of Poseidon and may therefore be added to the witnesses of the prevalence of this cult in Calabria.

NERETUM.

It is only twelve years ago that a bronze coin of this city was made known to Numismatists, hence we do not find this name Neretum in the Catalogue of the British Museum. The discovery of the coin was made known through the Zeitschrift für Numismatik (XXI Band, p. 251) in 1898. However in 1814 a specimen of the same coin was sold at the sale of the Count Wiczay. It is interesting to compare this old catalogue, illustrated with line engravings, with one of our modern catalogues: the coin of Neretum is seen illustrated on Plate XXVIII no 625. The catalogue is called Musei Hedervarii in Hungaria Catalogue. C. Michael Wiczay. Vindobonæ 1814. Some of the coins were bought for the French Cabinet. A third specimen of the coins of Neretum, a silver diobol, has been found in the British Museum, where it had been placed among the coins of Macedonia.

Neretum is one of those Iapygian cities lying about five miles from the coast of the bay of Tarentum, twenty-five miles north-west of Uxentum, and about fifty miles south-east of Tarentum. The modern town on the old site, called Nardo, contains no remains of antiquity. Neretum is not mentionned by any ancient authors except Pliny and Ptolemy who merely give the name as among the cities of the Iapygians (Pliny III, XI. Ptol. III. 1. 76 and Tab. Peut.).

From these coins we gather that the deity worshipped at Neretum was Apollo, whose full-length figure appears on the bronze, and whose head is represented on the silver coin in British Museum.

The cult of Apollo is said to have been widely spread from Crete, and as the Messapians are said to have been descended from ship-wrecked Cretans, it is not surprising that we should find this cult at Neretum.

SILVER COINS.

Rev. $\frac{\text{ϘA}}{\text{N}}$, a lyre. Size .35. Weight 7.7 grains.

BRONZE COINS.

Obv. Head of Apollo, to right, laureate.

In the field, in front, a tripod, with fillets hanging from the sides.

STURNIUM.

Pliny mentions a town of this name among the cities of Calabria (III, xi), and it was also mentioned by Ptolemy (III, 1, § 77).

It is known to numismatists as having issued some small bronze coins of the same type as those of Graxa, differing only in the legend STY, instead of ΓPA.

The town has been identified by Romanelli with the modern village of Sternaccia, situated about ten miles south of Lecce (the ancient Lupiæ), and a short distance north-east of Soleto (Soletum).

(Cluver Ital., p. 1231. Romanelli. Vol, II, p. 114). Soletum is about sixty miles south-east of Tarentum, the coins of which city were evidently copied by the citizens of Sturnium.

Size .65. Obv. A cockle-shell.

Rev. ΣTY. An eagle, to right, with wings open, standing on a thunderbolt.

UXENTUM.

Uxentum is one of the old native cities of the Iapygians which from its position, five miles from the bay of Tarentum, and sixty-five from that city, came under the influence of the Tarentines, and issued bronze coins with types which recall those of that Greek city. The site is only about fifteen miles from the headland called Iapygium or Salentinum, the most easterly point of Italy, which we commonly call the heel.

The only mention of Uxentum by ancient writers is the occurrence of the name in lists of cities of Calabria in Pliny (III, xi) and Ptolemy (III, 1, 76). Many ancient tombs have been found on the site, from which coins, vases, and inscriptions in the dialect of the Messapians have been taken.

The spelling of the name varies; for instance in the Tabula it is spelt Uhintum, and in some Mss. of Pliny "Ulentini", but Ptolemy gives Uxentum. Its modern name is Ugento.

In the Tauchnitz ed. of Strabo Vol. II, p. 49 the name is spelt Θυρᾶιοι, but the reading is uncertain. Kramer prefers οὐρια, some Mss. have Θυρίαι, some Θυραιαι. The corruption is probably the mistake of writing Θ for O.

The legends on the coins give the name as OΣAN or OZAN, giving both the earlier form Ξ, and the later form Z, of the letter ζῆτα which represented the sounds of s and d mixed. The Dorians made the s sound predominate, and the Ionians the d sound.

Some of the coins bear only the letters AO, and the name was probably written in full AOIAN.

The coins witness to the cults of Pallas and Heracles, and one type represents a Janiform head, without beard, wearing a crested helmet designed to fit the double head. A Janiform female head is found on a Quincunx of Rhegium, but that head is adorned, not with a helmet, but with modius stephane, earrings, and necklace.

At Paestum a Janiform head of Juno Moneta was issued and on early Asses of Volterra a diademed Janus head is found. The reason of this wide distribution of the design cannot been yet explained.

Thucydides in recording the events of 413 B.C. mentions that Demosthenes and Eurymedon crossed the Ionian gulf to the Iapygian foreland (ἄκραν). Starting thence they touched at the Choerades Islands, lying off Iapygia, and took on board their ships some Iapygian dartmen (ἀκοντιστάς) one hundred and fifty in number, of the Messapian tribe : and after renewing an old friendship with Artos, who also had provided them with the dartmen, being one of their chieftans, they arrived at Metapontum in Italy". These islands are little more than low rocks lying about four miles from Tarentum, now called isole di S. Pietro e S. Paulo.

This Artos may have been the ruler of Uxentum, or of Neretum, and he is interesting as bearing one of the few names of Messapian leaders known to us.

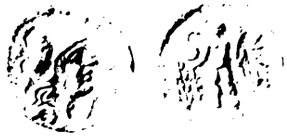
Rev. OZAN. Heracles as on No 1 : in front Nike to right crowning him : plain border.



IV. Semis. Size .75.

Obv. Similar to No 1 but with mark of value ∽ beneath the head of Pallas.

Rev. OIAN. Similar to Rev. of No 1, but in front an ear of wheat, and S : border of dots. On a variety of this type the symbol is a goat's head downwards to right, and S : no border.

UNIDENTIFIED COIN.

In the British Museum there is a small brass coin of Calabria size nearly ⅝ of inch.

Obv. Dolphin to right, small in proportion to the coin.

Rev. A star of right rays round small bold boss. It is not yet catalogued, or attributed to any city.

The dolphin appears on small brass coins of Graxa with a small crescent and star above. It is noticeable that we have the star on the Rev. of the above unidentified coin.

Two dolphins appear on small bronze coins of Tarentum ; and on small silver coins of Tarentum we find a dolphin, and beneath, a thunderbolt.

At Brundusium a small bronze coin bore a dolphin, and above the letter Ⱡ.

A dolphin with two dots, marking the Sextans, appears on coins of Venusia, size 1.5. and of Luceria size .9. A star of eight rays appears on coins of Teate, and a star of seven rays on coins of Salapia.

A star of eight rays also appears on coins of Luceria above a horse prancing, and on the coins of the Romano-Campanian series.

The eight-rayed star does not apparently occur on any of the coins of the purely Greek cities, but is common to many of the coins of the native races. Its signification has not been explained and it is hazardous to venture upon any suggestion. Is it the star of hope, or is it the rising sun of the young races entering upon the civilized life, or is it a sign of some worship of one of the heavenly bodies?

ROETTIERS, PHILIP (I) (Flem.). Goldsmith and Engraver, born at Antwerp, 20. December 1596 ; father of John Roettiers (1631-1703), Joseph (1635-1703), and Philip (1640-1718). He was descended from an ancient noble family ; and his father, also named Philip, had married a niece of the Duke of Alba, viceroy of the Low-Countries. The portraits, full-length, of our artist's father and mother, were painted in form of ex-votos by Anthony Vandyck. The Archduke Albert, governor of the Netherlands, held the child at the baptismal font, and young Philip received an excellent education at the Antwerp Jesuits' College. He learned die-sinking and chasing, and made a name as a Goldsmith and possibly also as a Medallist. He was married on 20. January 1625 to Elizabeth Thermés. It is said that he lent money to the exiled Charles II. of England, who promised employment for his sons on the Restoration. He appears to have been still living in 1661.

MM. Ch. Gilleman and A. Van Werweke (Médailles gantoises, Rev. belge num., 1902, p. 69) ascribes to Philip (I) Roettiers a medal of 1659, with busts of Louis XIV. and Philip IV. of Spain (reproduced, Pl. 1, 3), on the Conclusion of Peace. On 17. November 1659, Meester Philip contracted to supply, not later than a fortnight after Christmas, 45 specimens in gold of this medal, and his sons stood guarantors. This medal is also described in Van Loon, II, p. 459, and in Catalogus der Nederlandsche Gedenkpenningen, I, n° 907.

or before, to 1684, with a temporary absence from about 1673 to 1679. On 10. February 1674 he married Jeanne Marie de Mangelaer, by whom he had two sons who followed the profession of medallists, Philip (II), and Francis. He appears to have been still in London on 3. November 1685, when Francis was born, although he was nominated Engraver-general of the coins of the Netherlands on 4. December 1684. On 5. August 1686 he was received Engraver-general of the mint of the king of Spain in the Low-Countries. He died towards the end of 1718. During his tenure of office in London, he was employed in the cutting of dies for the currency. Lord Braybrooke (editor of Pepy's diary) ascribes to him the innovation of the Britannia type on the Pattern Farthing of 1665, although its author is no doubt John Roettiers. He executed some interesting English medals : Charles II. and Catherine (1667); their busts on either side ; signed on obv. P. R. ; — State of Britain (1667) ; obv. Bust of Charles II. ; ℞. Sleeping lion ; signed : P. R. ; — Liberty of Conscience, 1672 ; obv. Bust of Charles II. ; signed : Philip. Roti, F. ; ℞. Liberty seated ; — Namur retaken, 1695 ; obv. Among the other medals engraved by Philip Roettiers I have come across the description of the following : 1679. Charles II. of Spain and his Queen, Marie Louise of Orleans (in ex. of obv. PHILIPPVS, and in ex. of ℞. ROTTIERS) ; — 1687. John Ferdinand, van Berghem, bishop of Antwerp (P. M. Alphonse de Witte has described a number of Flemish Jetons by Philippe Roettiers (Le jeton dans les Comptes des Maîtres des Monnaies du duché de Brabant, Tijdschrift voor Munt-en Penningkunde, VI, 21 sqq.).

M. Alvin states : " Philippe Roettiers était, il faut l'avouer, un graveur très médiocre. Il exécuta, dit Pinchart, dans les années 1679 à 1717, une importante série de médailles dans lesquelles la décadence de l'art est très marquée : le dessin y est maniéré et manque à la fois d'élégance et de correction ; le modelé des chairs laisse particulièrement à désirer. The pound of Esterling money was to contain 12 ounces, to wit, fine silver, such as was then made into foil, and commonly called "Silver of Guthurons Lane", viz. 11 oz. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ dwt. The dies for this new money were delivered to Gregory de Rokesley on the 27th May 1280".

ROMANO, GIANCRISTOFORO (Ital.). Sculptor, Goldsmith, Medallist and Gem-engraver of the last four decades of the fifteenth century and early part of the sixteenth, circ. 1465-1512.

"Strongly influenced by l'Antico", says Herr von Fabriczy, "but surpassing him in almost every respect, appears an artist whom, in spite of his foreign origin, we must rank here, since the most important part of his career belongs to Milan and Mantua. Giancristoforo Romano represents in the third generation a family of artists, which, in his grandfather, Pippo Gante at Pisa, and in his father Isaia of Pisa in Rome, had furnished distinguished masters of sculpture. From 1491 to 1497 we find Giancristoforo occupied with important works of plastic art at the Court of Milan, from that time until the end of 1505 in Mantua, where in 1498 he made the medal of the Marchioness Isabella, his particular patroness[1]. Recalled by

Isabella d'Este.

Pope Julius II. to his native city, he designed there the Pope's medal, in 1506 ; also, in the following year at Naples, that of Isabella of Aragon, widow of Giangaleazzo Maria Sforza who had been dethroned by Lodovico Il Mora. After a passing sojourn at the Court of Urbino, where — accomplished courtier that he was

1. "Thanks to the sympathetic personality of the Marchioness, honoured throughout Italy, as well as to the excellence of the medal as an artistic achievement, it became so popular and was so much sought after that in 1505 Giancristoforo was obliged to issue a replica — the only instance known to us of an artist personally supervising a second edition of a medal. It deviates in a few features — the aquiline nose, the slightly projecting lower lip, the different necklace, the sharply defined edge of the bodice — from the original treatment, as is clearly evident from the example (in a gold frame set with jewels) in the Cabinet of Vienna. The reverse remained entirely unaltered in the replica."

— he won all hearts, especially by his musical and poetic endowments, he was entrusted in 1509 with the position of architect of the Cathedral at Loreto, where he died in the course of three years in the prime of life, a victim of the terrible disease which had been brought to Italy by the army of Charles VIII.

Pope Julius II.

" A document only recently discovered has shown the master to be the author of the three medals already mentioned. All three are inspired with a grace hitherto unknown in works of the kind — even the " Papa terribile " has acquired an expression of fatherly bonhomie in Romano's presentation. The relief is, at the same time, modelled with unusual delicacy, even a little affected nicety is not disdained : for example, the veil, which reveals rather then hides the features of Duchess Isabella, which the contemporary letter already mentioned extols as " cosa molto artificiosa. " The allegories of the reverses, in their carefully thought out composition, breathing throughout the keenest sense of beauty both in motive and form, are likewise jewels of their kind : inspired in both respects by the antique, they nevertheless forfeit nothing of their attractive individual cachet. The proudly standing goddess of Victory of the Gonzaga medal, with her Coan draperies flowing round her ; the indescribably graceful seated nude maiden on the Aragon medal, a marvel of expression and modelling on so small a scale; Peace and Faith joining hands in alliance over the sacrificial fire on the medal of Julius — all are perfectly finished pictures. With entire justice does the witness already mentioned say that they "ad judicio di ogni intelligente alli boni antichi se possono comparar", since not only in motive, but in their innermost being they breathe the spirit of the antique. True, their composition has been dictated by an entirely different principle from the realism which in Pisano appeals to us with elemental power. We already stand confronted with the Cinquecento view of the world and art!

" Besides these three undoubted pieces, some others have been quite recently added to the number of his works. Hitherto they had been attributed to an anonymous artist (or even, without any justification, to the Florentine painter, Filippino Lippi). On the ground of their great similarity in style, the time and place of their origin, the ties of relationship or friendship which existed between the persons depicted, W. Bode has recognised the hand of Giancristoforo Romano in the medals of Alfonso I. of Este and of his wife, Lucrezia Borgia, as well as in those of the otherwise unknown Jacopa Correggia, Maddalena de' Rossi and F. Francina. The medals of the Este couple were made in the year 1503, while one of the three redactions of the medal of Lucrezia, deviating by some slight alterations from the original, is not earlier than 1505. The assumption that the artist made the former in Mantua, the latter when passing through Ferrara on his way to Rome, has every show of probability, since Alfonso and his wife were brother and sister-in-law of the artist's patroness, Isabella Gonzaga. It is likewise known that the families of the Correggio and Rossi of Parma were related or on friendly terms with the Gonzaga and Este. Decisive, however, is the criterion of style. The medals of Jacopa and Maddalena still retain much of the character of L'Antico — in the latter his realistic force, in the former the delight in emphasising the ornament in costume and headdress (see his Balzo medal); while in grace and delicacy of modelling both medals far surpass the earlier artist's skill. Now the portraits of Lucrezia have so much in common with those of Isabella Gonzaga both in style and arrangement, and that of Alfonso, more especially in its soft modelling, so vividly recalls the portrait on the medal of Julius, that the attribution of the pieces to the same hand seems almost irrefutable. It is true that the perfectly charming representation of captive Cupid on the reverse of one of the medals of Lucrezia seems, in its free pictorial composition, to contrast with the severe plastic manner of the pieces certainly made by Giancristoforo Romano. Nevertheless it is more nearly approached by the earlier redaction of the Cupid scene on the Correggio and Rossi medals, and it is by no means inexplicable that the scene should be developed later in a more picturesque form. Above all, however, it is the same spirit of exquisite grace and deep sense of beauty that connects the fettered Cupid with the allegories of the undoubted pieces. Not without reason has so accomplished a judge as Friedländer pronounced the medal adorned by this scene "one of the most beautiful, most charming, and most rare".

"In addition to these pieces, restored to our master by Bode, we are inclined to ascribe to him the medal of the youthful Cardinal Domenico Grimani. Hitherto it has been regarded as a work of the Venetian medallist Vittore Gambello, probably on the sole ground that Gambello made a medal of the same personage in more advanced years, on the reverse of which the composition of the type of the earlier medal was copied exactly. In style, however, the two pieces are worlds apart! While the latter may be classed with Gambello's other works, the former shows many points of similarity with the medals of Giancristoforo, even to the form of the letters and the peculiarity that the letters on the reverse are smaller and thicker than those on the obverse. Moreover, the subject on the reverse,

Isabella d'Este.

Theology and Philosophy, symbolized by two female figures, most strikingly corresponds, both in composition and outline, with those on the other medals of the master, but has not the smallest resemblance to Gambello's style, as a comparison between this and the repetition of the same composition on his Grimani medal clearly shows. Since Giancristoforo's medal represents Grimani, who became cardinal in 1493 at the age of thirty, as at the most thirty-five years of age, it must have been made during the artist's Mantuan period, while on some chance visit to Venice, where the Cardinal may also have been accidentally at the time. That, however, his later medal, which represents him at the age of fifty to fifty-five, repeats the design on the reverse of the earlier piece was perhaps due to some express wish of the sitter. According to what we have just said, these medals must have been made about 1515; in fact, Gambello was occupied in Rome at the Papal Mint from 1515 to 1517."

The above admirable notice of Giancristoforo's Romano's work from the pen of Herrn. Fabriczy, whom I have quoted in-extenso, gives a clear account of the artist's work.

Bertolotti was the first to discover Giancristoforo's name as a Medallist (Artisti in relazione coi Gonzaga) from a letter addressed to the Marchesa of Mantua, Isabella d'Este, by Giacomo d'Atri, her ambassador at Naples, who mentions three of his medals. Vasari informs us that he was a pupil of Paolo Romano, and he calls him a clever sculptor, by whom are some works at Santa Maria in Transtevere. Giancristoforo is known also to have executed a tomb in the church of St. Vincent at Cremona, while at Venice are still existing two crystal vases by him with Biblical representations cut on them. He died at Loreto, 31. May 1512, from fever, leaving, amongst other things, a collection of 36 bronze medals, 87 silver medals, cameos, rings, precious stones, and antique intaglios, etc.

M. de la Tour hesitates to accept von Fabriczy's attribution to Giancristoforo Romano of the medals mentioned above, beyond the three first, which M. Valton was first to give to him (Rev. num., 1885, p. 316). Mr. Hill does not dispute the artist's authorship of the Lucrezia Borgia medal, but is not quite so confident about those of Alfonso I d'Este and Jacopa Correggia. The last was hitherto ascribed to Pomedello. M. de Foville suggests (Le Médailleur "l'Amour captif", Gazette des Beaux-Arts, 1908, pp. 385-393) the Mantuan artist MELIOLI as the author of the Lucrezia Borgia medal as well as those of Clara Gonzaga, and Jacopa Correggio, Melioli (q. v.), the Engraver of the coins of Giovanni Francesco II. of Mantua, executed medals of that Marquis, and of Magdalena Gonzaga. M. de Foville finds a great analogy in the work of the medal and coin of Gian Francesco II and the portrait of Lucrezia Borgia.

two authenticated pieces by his hand, of which no fewer than sixteen bear the portrait of Duke Cosimo I. To judge from the considerable number of Milanese and Genoese personages depicted, he appears to have worked in North Italy also. In 1575 he was appointed one of the die-engravers of the papal mint, but never seems to have made any prolonged sojourn in Rome. From 1550 until his death he was employed at the grand-ducal mint. Vasari cites among his works twelve medals of Cosimo I., the reverses of which depict the most important works of peace executed during his reign — the sanitation of Pisa, the water-supply of Florence, the foundation of a city on Elba, the building of the Laurentiana, the Palazzo Pitti, etc. All have been preserved: eight are even extant in marble replicas on a larger scale on the pedestal of a piece of sculpture, the purpose of which can no longer be ascertained, now standing in the Museum of the Refectory of the Ognisanti" (Engl. ed., p. 181).

NUMISMATIC SOCIETIES, MUSEUMS, &c.

Feb. 17. — Mr. H. A. Grueber, V. P., in the chair. — Mr. R. Sutcliffe and Mr. W. I. Williams were elected Fellows; and Mr. J. T. Bennett-Poë was admitted a Fellow.

Mr. F. A. Walters exhibited a series of gold and silver coins of Henry VI. described in his paper on the 'Restoration Coinage' of that king; Mr. Horace W. Monckton, six thalers of Saxony and Bohemia of the sixteenth century, to illustrate the portraiture of the period ; and Mr. T. Bliss, a fine set of nine pattern farthings of Charles II. in silver, bronze, and pewter.

The Rev. A. W. Hands read a paper on 'Juno Moneta,' in which he gave an account of an ingenious theory of the etymology of moneta proposed by Dr. Assmann in a recent volume of Klio. There are certain difficulties in accepting the traditional etymology of this important word. Dr. Assmann suggests that it is a corruption of machanath, camp, the legend on coins of Carthage of the fourth century B.C., which were no doubt well known to the Romans, and may have been called machanaths, which ultimately became corrupted to moneta. Analogies for the loss of the guttural are to be found in the Septuagint. Machanath, meaning camp, would be associated with war and also with Juno, the warlike goddess, the spear-holder. Money being the sinews of war, the temple of Juno was a peculiarly fitting place for the mint. The epithet Moneta clung to Juno, and from a false etymology with moneo gave rise to the stories which have been handed down in support of the traditional etymology. Mr. Hands argued that the Roman conception of Juno was essentially that of a warlike goddess, otherwise vows would not have been made to her on the battle-field. The conception of Juno, the goddess of marriage, &c., grew up later.

Mr. J. Allan said that it was improbable that these coins were known as machanaths, as the inscription would have been unintelligible to the Romans. If they were, it was impossible for machanath to become Moneta, the argument from the Septuagint not being a justifiable analogy. Even if the guttural were lost, the short final a could never become e. Moneta was an archaic and legitimate formation from moneo, analogous to Vesta and Morta. The -e- of the second syllable was really evidence of its antiquity. Even if we disregard the Roman explanations of the epithet, Juno might well be called the "adviser" in her capacity as Juno Pronuba. Juno was primarily the goddess of women and marriage, and not a warlike goddess.

Mr. Grueber also disagreed with Dr. Assmann's theory; and Mr. Webb emphasized the difficulty of finding instances of moneta meaning coin or mint in classical times.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.

Feb. 23. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — The following were elected Members : Lieut.-Col. G. W. Archer; Messrs. M. A. Brigg, Everard Butcher, T. E. Hodgkin, and J. C. Williams; the Belfast Library and Society for Promoting Knowledge, the National Museum of Ireland, and the University Club Library, New York.

Miss Helen Farquhar contributed a paper on the reign of James II., in continuation of her interesting series descriptive of the portraiture of our Stuart monarchs on their coins and medals. She deplored the decline of artistic merit as evinced in the concluding decades of the seventeenth century, which she attributed partly to the lack of emulation, once the milled coinage was fairly established; and partly to the fact that the trend of affairs prevented James from giving the same personal supervision to numismatics that had been vouchsafed to this branch of art by his father and brother. With the working of the Cornish tin-mines she associated the issue of the currency in that metal; and from evidence gleaned from the Treasury Papers and manuscript sources she offered reasons for the attribution of the Irish gun-money to the younger members of the Roettier family rather than to John Roettier, whose right hand was disabled in 1689 by an infirmity of the muscles. Miss Farquhar pursued her usual method of tracing the origin of the portraits upon the medals to their prototypes in statuary or pictures, illustrating her lecture with numerous lantern-slides for this purposes; and she exhibited a series of medals and coins of the period, including the tin halfpenny and farthing; also two portraits of Anne by O' Brisset in silver and tortoiseshell, for comparison with Roettier's work; and the original badge given by Charles II. to Richard Penderel after Worcester fight.

Amongst the many choice exhibits by other members were a series, in perfect preservation, of the English, Scottish, and Irish coinages of James II. in gold, silver, gun-metal, and pewter, including patterns in silver of the gun-money issues, from the collection of Mr. S. M. Spink; nine beautiful examples of the medallic art in the same reign, by Mr. A. H. Baldwin; a selection of gold and silver coins, patterns, and medals, by Mr. C. H. Nevill; four unpublished varieties of the coinage of Charles I. and the Commonwealth, by Mr. Samuel Page; a silver penny of Henry VII's first issue, by Mr. W. M. Maish; and an angel and angelet of Henry VI., by Mr. Joseph Young.

Mr. Baldwin also exhibited an enamelled portrait of James II. by William Craft, and Mr. W. J. Andrew a Cavalier's sword embossed

LES MONNAIES DE LA SUISSE JUSQU'EN 1798.

On nous écrit de Berne, le 4 février :

Sous ce titre, le Dr Altherr, à Berne, vient de publier le premier chapitre d'un volume en préparation chez les éditeurs Stämpfli et Cie à Berne. Il y raconte l'histoire de la frappe des monnaies suisses jusqu'au XVe siècle. Ce volume a valu à l'auteur le titre de docteur de l'Université de Berne.

M. Altherr n'en est pas à ses premières armes dans ce domaine; il a déjà publié un volume sur les principes de la politique monétaire suisse contemporaine.

Le volume en cours de publication donne un aperçu complet et intéressant des conditions monétaires de la Suisse et constituera une source première de renseignements pour tous ceux qui s'intéressent à l'histoire des monnaies de notre pays.

Reconnaissant la valeur scientifique et pratique de cette publication, le Conseil fédéral a accordé à son auteur une modeste subvention.

Une trentaine de pièces de monnaies en or de grande valeur, faisant partie des collections du musée de Brest, ont été volées à deux reprises différentes, après effraction des vitrines dans lesquelles elles étaient exposées. M. Terrène, commissaire de police, a découvert l'auteur du vol, ainsi que le recéleur. Plusieurs pièces ont été retrouvées.

A PRIMITIVE CURRENCY.

Currency on this route is primitive to a degree. Lump silver only is used and copper cash. Coined money is not current. Even in Honan city, which is distant two days only by rail from Peking, lump silver, the same cumbrous currency that has been used for centuries, is still employed. It is cut into small pieces by hammer and chisel. Every town and village has its own weights and scales, and there is no pretence at uniformity. Two forces are, however, working towards an improvement — the increase in the number of post-offices and the sale of stamps and money orders in dollars, and the extension of the railways and the use upon them of dollars and subsidiary coinage. In other parts of China dollars are being more widely used. I speak with some knowledge, for I have crossed China from Peking to the Tongking frontier, and through the south-western provinces of Yunnan and Kweichow back to Sanghai, and used nothing but dollars.

It may be added as a remarkable instance of the ancient civilization of this extraordinary people that banknotes were in circulation in their country over a thousand years ago, yet so conservative and contradictory are their methods that whilst they more or less appreciate the railroad " modern innovations cease abruptly at railhead. Passengers who want change at Honanfu must get it by chopping it off a silver bar! "

THE MAFEKING SIEGE NOTES.

(WAR OFFICE REPORT).

There is a footnote to the history of the war in this report, which shows that the sum of £4,590 was recovered in the following exceptional circumstances from the Standard Bank of South Africa.

During the siege of Mafeking the supply of cash in the town was insufficient to meet requirements, and the commanding officer gave directions for the creation of a paper currency redeemable at the Mafeking branch of the bank on the resumption of civil law. Accordingly £1 notes to the value of £683, ten-shilling notes to the value of £3,500, and coupons (1 s., 2 s., 3 s.) to the value of £1,045 were issued, making a total of £5,228. As each issue of notes was made, the paymaster paid into the bank by cheque an equivalent amount.

After the relief of the town the notes and coupons were extensively bought up as mementoes of the siege, and the paper presented for payment amounted to only £638, leaving a balance of £4,590 outstanding. The fact that the bank had been paid the full value of the notes and coupons in advance evidently escaped notice, and no steps seem to have been taken to obtain an account of the actual sums paid by the bank in redemption of the paper money until January, 1908, when the then paymaster brought the matter to the notice of the chief accountant of the South African command.

The circumstances were reported to the War Office, and thereupon the bank repaid the whole of the outstanding balance. Since the refund by the bank, notes and coupons of the value of £5 11 s. have up to March 31st, 1909, been presented for payment. The Army Council has given directions for a notice to be published on April 1st next warning the holders that the outstanding notes and coupons will not be payable after the expiration of eight years from the resumption of civil law (September, 1902).

THE

OF THE

BY W. H. VALENTINE.

This work, which it proposed to issue shortly, is designed to popularise the study of Muhammadan copper coins, and is the outcome of a student's endeavour to identify and arrange them. To this end the author has made faithful drawings of all the specimens of this class of coin that he has been able to find. Commencing with Turkey, the reader is taken numismatically through Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, to Nigeria (for which place the Royal Mint has recently struck a new coinage) and from thence back to East Africa and Arabia. Crossing from there to Europe, the tour continues throught the Crimea, Georgia, Persia, Afghanistan, Bukhara, and terminates in Chinese Turkistan.

Upwards of 900 coins struck during the last three centuries are illustrated, and the Arabic inscriptions carefully transliterated and explained. To assist in the classification of the coins, a geographical arrangement has been adopted, and six coloured maps have been added to enable the reader to locate the various mints.

The interesting field covered by this work has never as yet been dealt with, possibly on account of the great expense involved. It has been suggested that this may be lessened by using the line block process, and printing the major portion in manuscript form. The author hopes that sufficient promises of support will be received to enable the book to be published at a price not exceeding 10/6 a copy, and he trusts that numismatists generally will give the project a hearty support.

N. B. Since the above announcement was prepared orders for over a hundred copies of Mr. Valentine's work have been received by the author and ourselves. It is therefore now confidently hoped that sufficient encouragement may yet be accorded so that the publication of so valuable and unique a work of reference may not be much longer delayed.

It may be mentioned here that it is proposed to strictly limit the edition to 500 copies.

Illustrated specimen-page with Order-form, on application to Spink and Son Ltd.

I have had an opportunity of seeing what Mr. Valentine's proposed work is like, and I can confidently say that it will be of great use to Numismatists, who are often puzzled in assigning their Eastern Coins to the exact localities to which they belong — especially to such as have not the time or opportunity of studying the languages so essential to their elucidation.

Every coin named is fully illustrated and explained : and from one such, very often several others can be successfully allocated.

Its value will be appreciated the more as its pages are consulted.

GREEK COINS.

LUCANIA.

The boundary of Lucania on the west is the sea-coast, from a few miles north of Poseidonia to a few miles north of Laus; on the east, the coast of the Bay of Tarentum from the mouth of the river Bradanus to a few miles south of Thurii. The northern boundary is formed by about twenty miles of the border of Campania, and twenty of that of Samnium, fifty-five miles of the border of Apulia, and about twenty of that of Calabria. The southern boundary stretches about forty miles from sea to sea along the borders of Bruttium.

In the early days of the Greek colonization this district was known as Œnotria. Scylax is the earliest author who used the name Lucania; he is supposed to have flourished in the last half of the fourth century B.C.

The Œnotrians, regarded as belonging to the Pelasgian race, were easily assimilated with the Greek colonists, and appear to have been unwarlike. The troubles of the Greeks with the native races only began with the appearance of the Lucanians, who were of the Sabellian race, a branch of the Samnite nation. Strabo says "the Lucani are of Samnite origin. — We will narrate in a general manner what we have gathered concerning the Lucani, who dwell in the interior, without too much care in distinguishing them from the Samnites, their neighbours. Petelia is considered the metropolis of the Lucani, and is still well populated. It owes its foundation to Philoctetes, who was compelled to quit Meliboea on account of civil dissensions. Its position is so strong that the Samnites were formerly obliged to construct forts around it for the defence of their territory" (Strabo, VI, p. 253).

Petelia is in Bruttium which was won by the Lucani before the Bruttii rose to independence. For a description of the life of these early Lucanians confer that by Justin given in the following chapter on the Bruttii.

Petelia, situated about three miles from the eastern shore, and about thirteen north of Croton, probably fell into the hands of the Lucanians about 370 B.C. The peace enjoyed by the founders of the Greek colony at Thurium only forty miles to the north of Petelia, shows that the Lucanians had not invaded the land at the time, when that city was founded.

When the Lucanians entered this district they attacked first the cities on the West coast. Poseidonia was the first to fall before them, and soon after they attacked Thurium, which was defended by Cleandridas.

In 393 B.C. they had grown so formidable that a defensive league was made by the Greek cities who were attacked by both the Lucanians and the Syracusans under Dionysius (Diod. Sic., XIV, 91). Diodorus (12, 101) says they numbered thirty-four thousand men (Niebuhr, p. 46, ed. 1827).

In 390 B.C. the Lucanians gained a great victory at Laus, and again in 368 B.C. they conquered Croton. The Syracusans soon found their allies, the Lucanians, dangerous, and the younger Dionysius concluded a treaty of peace with them in 358 B.C., when the Lucanians were at the height of their power. Two years later the Bruttians took Terina. In 338 B.C. the Tarentines suffered a defeat from the Lucanians, and Archidamus, King of Sparta, was slain. Alexander of Epirus however, defeated the Lucanians at Paestum, but fell in 326 B.C. fighting the Bruttians. In 303 B.C. they concluded a treaty of peace with the Tarentines, who were helped by Cleonymus of Sparta. They soon afterwards rebelled and joined their kinsfolk, and it was not until 317 B.C. that the Romans were able to punish them for their rebellion, by sending the consul Æmilius into Lucania, and taking Nerulum by assault, a city fifteen miles north-east of Laus (Livy. 9, 20).

In the year 304 B.C. the Lucanians were included in the peace then made with the Samnites. From that time they became the friends of the Roman people, and it was because they were attacked by the Samnites that the Romans began the Third Samnite War. Generally the Lucanians were faithful to Rome throughout that war, but in 286 B.C. they attacked Thurium, which was defended by the Romans, and in 282 B.C. C. Fabricius defeated them in a great battle near that city. We know the names of some Lucanian chieftains, viz. Stenius, and Statilius (p. 96, 118. Pliny, N. H., 34. and Livy, XXIII, 8).

Mommsen says (vol. I, p. 271): "Consentia, which seems to have been the federal head-quarters of the Sabellians settled in Magna Graecia, fell into the hands of Alexander the Molossian. In vain the Samnites came to the help of the Lucanians; Alexander defeated their combined forces near Paestum. On his death in 332 at Poseidonia by the hand of a Lucanian emigrant, matters reverted substantially to their old position."

At the beginning of the Samnite wars with Rome, the Lucanians were at first in favour of joining their kinsmen the Samnites, but such an alliance involved peace with Tarentum, which many of the Lucanian chiefs would not allow, as it would stop their profitable pillaging raids. The Lucanians therefore made alliance with Rome in 326 B.C. (Livy, 8, 25).

When Pyrrhus in 281 B.C. arrived in Italy, the Lucanians sent troops to assist his army, and did good service at the battle of Ausculum. On the departure of Pyrrhus Lucania was desolated and punished by the Romans under C. Fabricius, and at length subdued by Sp. Carvilius and L. Papirus Cursor, in 272 B.C. (Livy, Epit., 13, 14).

In the Second Punic War the Lucanians were strong enough to aid the Romans, with 30,000 foot, and 3,000 horsemen. After the battle of Cannae in 216 B.C., they declared in favour of Hannibal, but this defection from Rome brought no peace, as their land was the battle-ground of Sempronius Gracchus and Hanno. At length in 209 B.C. they returned to their alliance with the Romans (Livy, 27, 15) but this secured them no peace until Hannibal withdrew after the battle of Metaurus in 207 B.C.

All traces of distinct nationality were destroyed by Sulla in the Social War.

LUCANIAN COINS.

The first signs of the power of the Lucanians are seen soon after 390 B.C. on the coinage of the Greek cities of Magna Graecia conquered by them. It is only natural that the fierce warlike Sabellian tribes should use the mints of the conquered cities.

Among the coins of Metapontum we find drachms bearing on the Obverse a head of Pallas to right, in Corinthian helmet; Reverse, an ear of corn with leaf to right, on which is an owl: ΛΟΥΚΑ in field to left. Other drachms with ΜΕΤΑ, and ΛΥΚ in monogram, and others with ΜΕΤΑ on Reverse, and ΛΥΚ in a countermark.

We find the Sabellian form of the letter Ⅽ on coins of Hipponium.

Some coins struck in Caulonia appear from their style to be the work of the Lucanians when rulers of that the city (Coins of Magna Graecia, p. 181).

On bronze coins of Laus we find the names of the leader of the Lucanians ΣΤΑ and ΟΨΙ. Statilius is mentioned by Pliny as the leader of their arms besieging Thurium.

Between 300 and 268 B.C. staters weighing 111 grs were issued by the Lucanian rulers at Poseidonia (Coins of Magna Graecia, p. 102).

Many other coins of the Greek cities which are barbarous in style may probably be accounted for by the conquest of those cities by the Lucanians.

BRONZE COINS OF THE LUCANIANS.

The coins which are more thoroughly Lucanian in type and legend, are all of bronze. The earlier series probably issued at the time of the Pyrrhic war 280-274 B.C., bear the legend ΛΟΥΚΑ-ΝΟΜ on the Reverse with a figure of Bellona. The later series issued probably during the war with Hannibal, 216-207 B.C., bear the legend ΛΥΚΙΑΝΩΝ on the Reverse, and a Head of Heracles on the Obverse.

First issues.

1. Size 1. Obv. Head of Mars to left wearing crested Corinthian helmet on which a Griffin : beneath, a thunderbolt.

TYPES OF THE BRONZE COINS.

The deities represented on these coins are those held in honour by the Samnites and Sabellians, Mars, Bellona and Jove, but intercourse with the Greeks had made the Lucanians also familiar with Nike, or Victoria, and the hero Heracles. The head of this hero had appeared on the coins of Etruria, Larinum and Luceria, but in all cases were copied from the Greek type.

MARS.

In the British Museum Catalogue the head of Mars is described as Ares, but that is only the application of a Greek name to the Italian deity who was generally identified with Ares. The same head appears on coins of Cosa, Consentia, Petelia and those of the Bruttii. The Lucanians probably called this deity Mamers or Mavers or Mavors (Varro). From this god Mamers, the tribe called Mamertines in Messana derived their name. The wolf was regarded as the symbol of Mars and hence we find on the coins a wolf's head, which may also have reference to the name of the tribe Lucani Λυκανοι derived from λυκός a wolf.

The spelling of their name in Strabo λευκανοι as if from λευκός, white, is evidently a mistake, the coins giving sufficient evidence as to the original spelling (Strabo, VI, 253). But the name λυκανοι is only the translation into Greek of the Sabine word for the wolf-folk, the Hirpini, who dwelt just to the north of Lucania in the mountains, and who probably were the stock from which the Lucanians emigrated, and their old name naturally received a Greek form when they came in contact with the Greeks. Strabo thus describes them : "Beyond are the Hirpini, who are also Samnites, their name they take from the wolf which conducted their colony, a wolf being called by the Samnites Hirpus" (Strabo, V, 250).

The fierce wolves were the natural emblems of the ideal deity of the war-loving men who sought by war new homes in the plains when driven forth by hunger from the dreary mountains of Samnium. The worship of Mars is too familiar to need further notice here. This cult of the god among the Lucanians represents the furthest limit attained to the south, and here the Romans learnt to identify their own Mars with the Greek god Ares.

BELLONA.

Bellona, regarded as the wife or sister of Mars, was equally a Samnite goddess, and her cult is thought to have been introduced to Rome by the Sabines. Her character is the same as that of Mars; her's was the influence that urged men to bloodshed and cruelty. As her figure is not represented on the Roman Consular coinage these coins of the Lucani are especially interesting. The Bruttii, who are descended from the Lucanians, are the only other people who represented her on their coins. We should have expected to see a scourge or whip in her hand from the references in the poets, but the coins shew her as bearing a spear just as Hera was represented among the Greeks, and the change may be owing to Greek influence.

Virgil describes her (Aen., VIII, 703) : "Quam cum sanguineo sequitur Bellona flagello" (whom Bellona follows with her bloody scourge). And Lucan in his Pharsalia (VII, 569) speaks of her "as Bellona shaking her blood-stained whip". Horace says : "He who is wicked will be frantic too. Bellona who delights in bloodshed has thundered about him whom precarious fame has captivated (Sat., II, III, 223).

Livy gives us the prayer of self-dedication made by Decius in 338 B.C. as beginning "Jupiter, Father Mars, Quirinus, Bellona, ye Lares", &c.

Ovid refers to the building of her temple in his Fasti (VI, 201) : "On this day (Mar 24) Bellona is said to have been enshrined in the Etrurian war; she, auspicious ever, favours Latium, Appius was the builder, he who when peace was refused to Pyrrhus saw clearly in his mind, though, as to his eyes, he was blind."

The building was erected in 296 B.C. (Livy, X, 19). There is a treatise on this cult by C. Tiesler "de Bellone cultu et sacris" (Berlin, 1842).

ZEUS or JUPITER.

The worship of the god who ruled the heavens, giving rain and thunder, was as common in Italy as in Greece. There also his cult was associated with hills and high places. The mountain tribes of Samnium naturally worshiped this god, and among the Oscans he was called Lucerius or Lucesius, a name derived from the word for light corresponding with the word Dies whence Diovis, Diespiter, Diovispiter and Jupiter. The head of this god on type Nos. IV and VII is therefore one which the Lucanians would regard as representative of one of their own natural cults and not merely a copy on the Greek god Zeus.

NIKE and HERACLES.

The Lucanians would meet with the figure of Nike on the coins of Neapolis, Hipponium, Medma and Metapontum. This type is explained in Coins of Magna Graecia (p. 216, 217). Heracles would probably have been known to them before their invasion, but they would meet with many types representing this hero on the coins of the cities conquered by them; for instance, at Croton, Metapontum, Neapolis, Thurium, Valentia, and Velia, and the types of Heracles are purely Greek. The fact that the coins of their kinsmen the Bruttii, are so much more common than those of the Lucanians shows that the former enjoyed greater prosperity and suffered less from the vengeance of the Romans.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF MEDALLISTS

B.C. 500 — A.D. 1900.

(Including the names of several hitherto unpublished artists.)

ROSSI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO DE (Ital.). Milanese Gem-, and Coin-engraver, and Medallist who flourished from about 1517 until after 1575. He was born at Milan, worked at Venice for some years, and in 1544 settled at Rome, where he was employed in engraving medals for the Popes Marcellus II. and Paul IV. In 1557 he accepted an offer of two hundred ducats from Cosimo I., Duke of Florence, to cut a large cameo on which is depicted the entire grand-ducal family. This famous cameo is still preserved, although in a fragmentary condition, in the gem collection of the Uffizi gallery at Florence. The artist resided four years in Florence, 1557-1560. To this period belong his medals on the conquest of Calais by Henry II. of France, 1558, and that of Giovanni Battista Gelli. In 1560, he returned to Rome, and there became Warden of the Papal Mint in Cesati's place. In this capacity he also engraved dies for coins, and medals of Cardinal Carlo Borromeo (1563), Popes Pius IV. (seven pieces), Pius V. (nine) and Gregory XIII. (three).

Beside these, Armand ascribes to Rossi a Portrait-medal of Vincenzo Bovio, apostolic protonotary of Bologna, 1550, and Keary three others, but without any justification (Brit. Museum Guide, Italian Medals, pp. 60-61).

The workmanship of the Rossi medals is somewhat rough.

As a Gem-engraver, this artist established a reputation by his famous cameo, an onyx of seven inches in diameter, with the portraits of Cosimo I. and his wife, Eleonora di Toledo, accompanied by their seven children in three-quarters length. "One of Rossi's signed works," says King, "has come under my notice, an intaglio in sard, Saturn seated, holding a large scythe; under the throne, G. ROSSI. The work exhibits that excessive polish which is the surest criterion for recognizing the productions of the cinquecento school. This is the sole instance known to me of a cinquecento artist's signature occurring placed on any other of his works than the crystal plaques, with the exception perhaps, of the masterpieces of Il Greco; and even his name may have been intended to pass current for antique with the world at large. Hence it is demonstrable that the smaller gems then so abundantly executed were meant to be brought into the market as works of ancient engravers, just as the heaps of coins from the dies of the same artists are known to have been."

Giovanni Antonio de Rossi's period of activity as a Gem-engraver belongs to the earlier part of his life, which he spent at Milan, Venice, and Florence. A Portrait-cameo of a Mr. Marlyn, is signed: V. P. M. IO. ANT. R. (onyx).

ROSSI, PROPERZIA DE' (Ital.). Gem-engraver of the first half of the sixteenth century, who died in 1533 at Bologna. She commenced her career by engraving minute relievi on peach-stones. Vasari speaks with astonishment of a Crucifixion with an infinity of figures, besides the executioners and the Apostles, worked in this manner. Afterwards she distinguished herself in sculpture in marble, many pieces from her chisel being incorporated in the Cathedral of San Petronio. Finally, she gave herself up entirely to engraving copper-plates. Nothing is recorded of her proficiency in gem-engraving, but her extraordinary skill in the first art she cultivated makes it almost certain that she succeeded in cameo-cutting on harder materials. She died in 1530, in the very week that Clement VII. crowned the Emperor at Bologna, to that pontiff's infinite disappointment, who as a lover of art was extremely anxious to have seen her. ROTH, JOHANN BAPTIST (Austr.). Chief Coin- and Medal-engraver to the Imperial Mint at Vienna, was born in that city in 1802, and died there in 1869. His first work of note was the Milanese Coronation medal of Ferdinand I., 1838, which after Manfredini's medal was the best of the eight competitive medals issued to commemorate that event. In 1840 he engraved the Medal on the Inauguration of the Kaiser Ferdinand Waterworks at Vienna; — 1841. Return of Syria to the Porte by Mehemet Ali; — 1843. Completion of the Tower of St. Stephan's Church at Vienna; — 1844. Inauguration of the Southern State Railways from Vienna to Gratz; — 1845. Inauguration of the Northern State Railways from Vienna to Prague; — Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition at Vienna; — 1846. Tenth Anniversary of the Deaht of Francis I.

In 1840 J. B. Roth undertook the issue of Viennese Historical Thalers, but only one, that commemorating the construction of the Schottenthor was struck.

In 1841 he executed the official medal on the Building of the famous Bridge over the lagoons at Venice, which however is not signed.

ROTHE, AEGIDIUS (Germ.). Son of Constantin Rothe; appointed Assayer at the Royal Swedish Mining College at Stockholm, 1674.

ROTHE, CONSTANTIN (Germ.). Mint-master at Dresden, 1640-1678. He was a son of Michael Rothe, and grandson of the Annaberg Mint-master, Matthaeus Rothe; born 16. September 1600; died, 6. June 1678. He was city Warden of Leipzig, and called over to Dresden about 1640. As Mint-master he placed his initials and an acorn on the coins. He married on 21. September 1641 and had elevenchildren.

John George II, Reichsthaler, 1660.

This Mint-master's privy mark occurs on the coins of Johann George I. and II.

"The Reichs-Thalers of Johann Georg II., Halves and Orts produced by Mint-master Constantin Rothe are of the usual type but the Elector is represented in his robes and ermine-mantle with drawn sword, the cap of State being placed on a table before him. These portraits are of very poor execution, but this monarch probably furnished a very ungrateful task to the artist, for his features are of surpassing ugliness on all coins of his reign. Of splendid conception and execution however are the "Broad" multiple thalers of 1663 which represent a large standing figure of the Elector facing, robed over his armour, and standing upon a tesselated pavement between a draped column and a table upon which is placed his plumed helmet and gauntlets.

"The reverse shews the Electoral Arms with date etc. within a narrow wreath surrounded by twenty shields of Arms of the Saxon territories and dependencies. This was also issued by Constantin Rothe whose initials appear with the Annaberg mint-mark, an acorn."

"In 1667 John George II. entered into convention with the Elector of Brandenburg and the Duke of Brunswick by which the

"The second series of Reichs-Thalers produced by Rothe shew a half-figure of John George II. in armour and wig with naked sword, his plumed helmet placed before him. The reverses continue the conventional type.

"Probably the most remarkable numismatic productions of this reign to British notions would be the several so-called "Hosenband" Thalers which commemorate the joyful reception by John George II. of the Order of the Garter from king Charles the Second of England in 1671 and the Chapter of 1678 which was celebrated at the Saxon Court with great circumstance.

"The obverse of these pieces shew on Obv. a large and elaborate representation of the combat between St George and the dragon, surrounded by EN HONNEUR DU SOUVERAIN DU TRES NOBLE ORDRE DE LA IARTIERE. On the reverse in nine lines within a une attitude, un beau pli antique, la vie contemporaine l'a pris bien davantage. Les puissants et les humbles ont tour à tour passé devant lui, et tous lui ont laissé le secret d'eux-mêmes, car il a surpris chez les uns et les autres l'expression ou le geste simple qui caractérise une vie. De là ces dessins pleins de charme, si naturels en leur séduction (L'Art décoratif, III, p. 244).

Sketch for an Agricultural Prize Medal.

« Qui donc aujourd'hui ne connaît les exquises merveilles de Roty, ces précieuses petites tablettes de métal si vivantes et si émouvantes, qui parlent avec tant d'éloquence à nos sentiments les plus hauts et les plus désintéressés, les plus profonds et les plus intimes? Qui ne connaît cette médaille commémorative du 25e anniversaire de la fondation de la République « Patria Non Immemor », cette Patrie, grave, sérieuse, triste, au grand œil creux et réfléchi, toujours en deuil, mais dont le revers réveille le frisson des grands espoirs avec son coq qui chante dans l'aurore, sur la terre inondée de rayons, éventrée par la charrue? Qui ne connaît cette grande et immortelle figure de Jeanne, liée au poteau infâme, levant au ciel, dans les flammes du bûcher, ses yeux pleins de foi, qui semblent répéter les paroles de l'exergue : « Ma mission était de Dieu! ». Qui ne connaît toutes ces nobles et touchantes allégories qui font vibrer si discrètement et si profondément les fibres les plus sensibles de nos cœurs : La Maternité, pressant sur son sein, dans un geste de tendresse si chaude et si caressante, le cher petit être qu'elle baise au front, la Jeunesse offrant ses hommages au vieux Chevreul, la fiancée de la Médaille de Mariage qui tend sa main pour recevoir l'anneau du fiancé, avec une dignité si modeste, si chaste, un don si pur et si entier de son être? Et toutes ces figures, d'une grâce infinie, ces types enchanteurs de jeunes femmes d'une beauté particulière qui les fait toutes parentes, d'une gravité simple, d'une élégance sérieuse et réservée, ayant toutes, dans leur attitude calme et leurs gestes rythmés, je ne sais quoi de noble, de chaste, de fier et de virginal. Il s'en exhale un parfum très frais de nature, uni à un souvenir lointain et suave des plus beaux exemples de l'antiquité. Ce charme opère si instantanément, avec une telle puissance, qu'on a l'impression, devant cet ensemble si riche et si varié, si imprévu et si nouveau, d'être en contemplation devant l'œuvre d'un génie ardent et spontané, à l'imagination active et toujours mouvante, produisant sous l'empire de l'inspiration et de l'entraînement. On ne perçoit pas au premier abord toute la science, la réflexion, la logique, l'esprit d'observation rigoureuse, d'analyse méthodique subtile et délicate, qui ont contribué à former cette magnifique éclosion poétique, si séduisante et si émouvante, cette splendeur d'art et cette profondeur de pensée (L. Bénédite, L. O. Roty: Art et Décoration, 1897, I, p. 34).

"Every one knows how important a position has now been reached by the medal in the domain of jewellery. For a long time it was the fashion to have a piece of antique money mounted as a brooch or pin; then came the idea of substituting effigies of more recent date for these relics of by-gone civilisations, these little discs of metal, with their time-worn, half-effaced relief; finally, it seemed desirable to be, as Daumier strove to be, de son époque — up-to-date, in a word; to pass over works which were not conceived with a view to ornament, and in their stead to model specially medals appropriate in character to the part they were to play in setting off the modern toilette.

M. Roty was the first to understand their legitimate conditions, the first to realise them fully. His native delicacy, his sentiment at once subtle and strong, did much to support his ambition. Again and again, to the delight of womankind, he has revived the smiling graces of the eighteenth century. His success, as was only natural, produced imitators; and to-day, even in the small towns in France, one may see in the jewellers' windows these medal-brooches, some the work of M. Roty himself, others by M. Vernon, M. Prouvé, or M. Yencesse—all most attractive and appropriate articles of ornament, and at the same time genuine works of art" (Roger Marx, French Medal, XXV, 23).

"The powers of men like Roty or Chaplain stand out the more prominently as they mark the logical conclusion, the result of half a century of labour and research. There is an abundance of contrasts between the works of the two men; and the diversity of talent shown by these leaders, while adding considerable lustre to the present movement, is also an incentive to fresh rivalry between them. Chaplain is remarkable for his force. His works gain fulness by the boldness of their plan, their sober style of draughtsmanship, and the pronounced fondness of their author for powerful figuration. He is above all a rigorously truthful portraitist, excelling in the characterisation and the definition of the male physiognomy. His series of portraits of the members of the Academy of Fine Arts deserves hence-forward to be regarded as classic. M. Roty's art reveals other phases of French thought. More sensitive and more imaginative than M. Chaplain, and more solicitous of grace and distinction, at once ingenuous and subtle, he recalls Proud'hon, inasmuch as, like him, he has the gift of realising, arousing, and making evident at the first glance the meaning of the most abstract generalities. In his allegories, as in his symbols of faith and love and maternity, poetry and truth are delightfully mingled. His whole work proclaims and sings the beauty of womanhood, now revealed quite unclothed, now the contour of the form left to be divined under the transparent draperies. These garments, flowing in harmonious folds, have been compared to those seen in Grecian statuary and in the coroplastes of Tanagra. It would be more correct to say that M. Roty has rejuvenated the art of antique drapery, and has derived therefrom many exquisite effects. His, too, is the credit of having restored to honour the plaquette, which would seem to have lost its use since the Renaissance" (R. Marx, The Renaissance of the Medal in France, The Studio, XV, 15).

« Avec M. Roty " says M. Roger Marx", l'art du médailleur atteint sa pleine expression d'originalité, d'indépendance. L'allégorie, qui a répudié les mythes consacrés, s'humanise, s'individualise, de manière à découvrir au premier regard le sens des généralisations les plus abstraites; moderne par le type, le galbe, l'ajustement, elle revêt une forme définitivement dégagée des lourdeurs du second Empire, une forme jeune, svelte, nerveuse, dont la courbe se suit sans peine sous l'envolée des draperies légères. Et l'accord est exquis quand à l'allégorie se mêle quelque réalité naïvement observée. Une médaille, une plaquette de M. Roty, c'est cette alliance imprévue : la fraîcheur souriante de l'imagination s'accompagnant de l'étude passionnée de la nature, l'invention s'ajoutant à la vérité pour se pénétrer délicieusement; c'est encore le métal qui s'anime et emprunte à la dégradation à peine accusée des reliefs et à la transparence des ombres le secret de la couleur, l'attrait d'une harmonie apaisée. D'où vient pourtant que cet art nous trouble à ce point, sinon qu'il est tout d'instinct, plein de sincérité, d'émotion tendre et neuve ? L'exemple d'Evainetos, de Kimôn, de Sperandio n'a donc que faire ici. M. Roty a pu goûter le charme de l'antiquité, à la façon d'André Chénier, mais rien ne vaut à son gré la nature ambiante, qu'il interroge ardemment, en analyste patient et sensible, qu'il exprime sans subtilité florentine, avec la pure bonne foi et la chaleur d'âme d'un maître de vraie lignée française » (Médailleurs français, p. 21).

IL SESTANTE UNICO DI TARQUINIA E LE MONETE AFFINI DI COSA VOLCIENTE.

Nella Rivista Italiana di Numismatica (an. XXI, 1908, fasc. III, dicembre) pubblicai un rarissimo e sconosciuto sestante di sistema ridotto, i cui caratteri, il tipo e la leggenda m'indussero ad attribuirlo a Tarquinia, la celebre metropoli degli Etruschi, della cui officina monetaria non si conosceva fino ad ora alcun altro esemplare coniato.

La moneta fu così da me descritta:

D: Testa galeata di Pallade a dr.; dietro, due globetti. Intorno, leggenda a caratteri etruschi

(Ae. gr. 3.20).

Di quest' unico esemplare conservato nella mia collezione e della notizia che io ne diedi si occuparono benevolmente alcuni dotti numismatici, confermando l'esattezza della mia attribuzione. Solo il ch. dr. Dressel, a cui la mia scoperta avea prodotto non poca curiosità ed interesse, fu mosso a dubitare della congettura da me proposta; anzi dall' esame d'un calco richiestomi tolse argomento d'impugnare non soltanto il contenuto della leggenda, ma benanche la presenza del gruppo di lettere costituenti la leggenda stessa.

Mi duole che il dotto ed autorevole Direttore del Kaiser Friedrich Museum, più che ad una discussione di criterii interpretativi, abbia richiamata la mia attenzione sopra una semplice questione di fatto. Perchè tale può dirsi la provata o negata presenza dell' iscrizione apposta sulla moneta. Ma perchè il giudizio del pubblico non attribuisca alla fallacia de' miei occhi un errore materiale, produco qui, a grandezza di tre volte, il facsimile dell' esemplare,

che vorrebbero indicare il nome di Tarquinia (Tarchna), comune ad altre iscrizioni. E se pure si voglia dubitare delle prime due lettere a ed r, delle quali è visibile la sola traccia superiore, ritengo che le altre tre ch-n-a costituiscano assolutamente un terminativo della parola Tarchna perchè, trattandosi di moneta etrusca, al nome di nessun' altra città quell' avanzo di lettere potrebbe convenire. Si è in presenza d'una leggenda retrograda a caratteri etruschi? Su ciò non cade dubbio; e mi pare anche d'averlo con ogni chiarezza dimostrato, escludendo in modo assoluto il sospetto che possa trattarsi d'una imitazione o disfigurazione di leggenda nord-etrusca, a somiglianza di quelle comuni ai popoli della Gallia, come è dato apprendere dagli esemplari con protome equina del tesoro di Jonquières e di Valenza (Drôme).

Già ebbi adosservare che il tipo del nostro sestante è perfettamente conforme a quello delle monete di Cosa o Cossa Volcientium, altra sede degli Etruschi, alla quale lo stesso Dressel, contro l'opinione precedente del Carelli, dell' Avellino, del Millingen, del Ruhnken, del Madwig, rinnovata recentemente dall' Head, ha attribuito gli esemplari a leggenda COSANO o COHANO [1].

Dopo la caduta di Faleria, Cosa o Cossa era entrata nel numero delle dodici città confederate a capo delle quali, come madre patria, risiedeva Tarquinia. Da ciò si deve spiegare come le sue monete sieno uniformi nel tipo a quelle di Tarquinia. Questa uniformità dovrebbe costituire un grave argomento di fondatezza in favore dell' attribuzione da me proposta e servirebbe a dimostrare che la leggenda COSANO non possa riferirsi ad altro titolo di città diversa da quella etrusca, i cui tipi armonizzano con quelli della città sorella, ossia di Tarquinia. A conferma di questa argomentazione concorrono anche i recenti ritrovamenti di monete cosane, avvenuti in territorio d'Orbetello, come già quelli d'Ansedonia, fondata sulle rovine di Cosa, ricordati del Garrucci [2], il quale esplicitamente afferma, alla stregua di autorevoli testimonianze, che le monete di Cosa sono state sempre rinvenute in territorio etrusco e non altrove. Siffatte circostanze dovrebbero dunque tagliar corto a tutta la fioritura d'ipotesi sulla controversa ubicazione di quella città che altri avea riposto nella Campania, in regione non lontana da Ercolano e

Pompei; altri nel Sannio, fra gl'Irpini. Recentemente il Pais, in una sua comunicazione verbale all' Accademia di Archeologia di Napoli, del 5 aprile 1901, ha vagheggiata un' altra congettura, che la sede cioè delle monete in questione debba ricercarsi in una nuova Cosa, situata nella regione soprastante a Pesto, non lungi dal fiume Sele, al limite del bosco Persano, ove esiste tuttora una terra con lo stesso nome [1]. La nuova sede ricordata dal Pais presenta traccie di dominazione etrusca, dovute a motivo di colonizzazione precedente. Ma questo richiamo alla madre patria, la quale potrebbe essere stata la stessa cosa Volciente, non costituisce, secondo io penso, argomento bastevole per negare a quest' ultima le monete con la leggenda COSANO.

Restituendosi a Cosa Volciente queste monete, si viene implicitamente a riconoscere che il sestante di tipo identico e con la leggenda etrusca, debba spettare a Tarquinia, come io avevo sostenuto e come la leggenda, sebbene mutilata, offre motivo di ritenere.

THE GOLD MEDALLIONS OF ABUKIR [2]

Signor Arvasutaki has recently published a brochure on the question of the authenticity or non authenticity of the Abukir Medallions (five of which were purchased by the Berlin Museum), and he appears to have arrived at the decision that they are not genuine.

Further enquiries made by me, with the aid of photographs and impressions, had almost led me to the same conclusion, but as I had never had the originals themselves before my eyes, I felt it was imperative for me to give the reasons for the opinion I expressed before the first Archaeological Congress in Athens.

In order to enable other Numismatists who took an opposite view, to know definitely on what grounds these twenty medallions were condemned by certain authorities, I decided to publish my reasons in the " Journal international de Numismatique ", 1909, as of course, pieces of such historical interest should not be condemned at sight, or until after most careful consideration, more especially when purchased by the directors of such an eminent National Museum.

My good intentions were however frustrated, for on my hon. colleague Dr Dressel informing me that he had bought five of the medallions for Berlin, at his request I decided not to publish anything on the subject until after he had made public his opinion, by which he rather hoped he would be able to convince me.

A careful perusal however of his book failed to alter my conclusion that these medallions were certainly false.

I must confess that when the original owner kindly permitted me to handle one of these pieces for a few moments, it appeared to me to be genuine, but nevertheless I decided to immediately publish my adverse views (translated for this journal) with a few additional points to refute Dr Dressel's arguments.

Owing to a misunderstanding with the Editors, the publication of my article was delayed, and did not appear till the third issue of this journal for 1907, and then only in part, the remainder appearing in subsequent numbers, concluding in February 1910.

In the meantime I visited Berlin on business connected with the Athens mint, so had the opportunity of seeing the five medallions, about which I still retained my first impression.

At my request, the coins were submitted to my inspection one by one, and my impression that they were authentic, grew stronger and stronger, so much so, that no further examination nor any adverse opinions seemed likely to upset it.

Mirabile dictu!, after a month's study, I found myself quite unable to support my former opinion, and so was on the point of writing from Berlin to suspend the publication of my manuscript.

Having now lost all confidence in my own judgement, I began to wonder if a similar thing would happen to me as it did to Dr Dressel, i. e. after comparing four of the medallions, with an eminently satisfactory result as to their genuineness, and then, — to doubt again if they were not after all reproductions of the other sixteen specimens.

I don't know if any of my colleagues share my new opinion, as perhaps they hold that first impressions are the best, and that I wavered whilst under the charm of the beauty of the Berlin medallions.

Right or wrong, I may say at once, I have entirely cancelled my former opinion as to the non-authenticity of these pieces, and therefore it is my first duty to Science to make this public confession, and to refrain from publishing anything of a contrary nature.

However I am still convinced that there are certain points in my M.S.S. that would have sorely troubled those who uphold the authenticity of the Medallions, and in any discussion that might have followed, questions could have been asked, which would have been very difficult to answer.

But this would neither prove that they were right nor wrong, as, not being coins, they do not altogether belong to Numismatics, but to a Science only too little known.

In conclusion, I feel I must now publicly confess that I have erred in the matter of the Abukir Medallions, and I am so much the more pleased to do so, in being able to appreciate the courage of the man, who, in spite of all hostile opinions, purchased at a very high price, five of these medallions for the well known Museum, the management of which was under his care.

A UNIQUE OTHMANLI COIN

Of the many interesting pieces figured in my forthcoming book on " The Modern Copper Coins of the Muhammadans " none are of more surpassing interest than the one here described. In the first place the obverse contains a coiled snake as the central figure. It is a well known fact that the Turks are very strict in their religious observances and they are expressly enjoined by the " Koran " not to reproduce anything animate or inanimate such as portraits, paintings &c. and none of their coins represented anything of the kind, not even a leaf or flower, until recent times [1]. This coin therefore becomes a very prominent one on that account alone and renders it very conspicuous. The only coin known in the Othmanli series to bear the representation of a living animal. In the second place the reverse forms another most singular feature of this strange piece. It reads at top : " Khallad mulkah " (May he perpetuate his kingdom). Below this is : " Muhammad ibn Murad khan. " i. e Muhammad son of Murad khan. The date (on the other side) is 852 (1448 A.D.).

Now Muhammad was not reigning at this period. He had been on the throne, for his father Murad II, tired of wars and turmoil, had abdicated and retired to Magnesia making Muhammad his successor in 847 A.H., the son being 17 years old. The enemies of Turkey thought this too good an opportunity to lose and therefore began to attack the Turks very vigorously and powerfully. Muhammad II appealed to his father for help and to resume regal power. This event took place and Murad II reigned till his death in 855 A.H.

The coin therefore must have been struck by Muhammad II during his voluntary retirement. Unfortunately the mint is obscure and affords no assistance, this part of the field being apparently double-struck. It has occurred to me that possibly some of your many readers may (if you could allow this to be inserted in your world-wide " Numismatic Circular ") be able to throw some further light in regard to the issue of this remarkable piece.

Mr. D. J. Howorth has the pleasure of possessing the original, and I owe him many thanks for allowing me to reproduce this and many other coins of his in my book.

RARE PAPAL COINS.

Amongst the innumerable rarities which exist in the important and interesting series of Papal coins, one of the greatest is undoubtedly the silver "Scudo" of Pius VII with portrait.

This Pope notwithstanding the agitated times of his reign, found leisure in occupying himself in the improvement of the monetary circulation, as is testified by the edicts of the Cardinal Chamberlain 30th Dec. 1801 of the Treasurer General 5th Oct. 1802.

In 1815 after his return from his imprisonment in France, the Papal Mint was reopened after having been closed from 1810-1814 during the French occupation of Rome and the first act of Pius VII. was to strike new silver scudi besides the doppie in gold and other silver coins. The engravers at the Roman mint at this period were, Tommaso Mercandetti, G. Hamerani, G. Pasinati and later Cerbara, Girometti, Brandt and Passamonti. Pasinati was ordered to prepare the dies for the silver Scudo of the Anno XVI. Of this engraver are the commemorative medals "URBI ET ORBI RESTITUTUM A.XV, DEDIT GLORIAM IN ISTO LOCO A.XVI, CONSTANTIA PRINCIPIS PROVINCIAETA RECEPTAE A.MDCCCXV, TU DOMINUS ET MAGISTER A.XIX, AND EDUXIT VINCTOS IN FORTITUDE".

He prepared a splendid die for the new scudo and contrary to the orders of the Pope, engraved the venerable effigy of the Pontiff. But having presented the die for papal sanction, Pius VII refused to give his "nulla osta" and giving as reason humility, requested that his portrait should be replaced by his coat of arms as had been used in other of his coinage.

Cinagli in his work of Papal Coins at page 409 says: "Of these scudi only six were struck" and he also gives a design of the said coin which is far from being correct and precise. The coin which is here illustrated belongs to Prince Lancellotti, who has kindly permitted me to reproduce it:

The obverse has the effigy of the Pope and the inscription PIUS VII PONT. M.A.XVII.; under the bust PASINATI.F. — Reverse, the Church holding a temple with the left hand and the keys of S. Peter with the right — under is the coat of arms of Monsignor Lante, president of the mint, and below to the left, PASINATI. On the edge of the coin is the motto IN TERRA PAX.

Antonio Lante, a Roman nobleman, was born in Rome on the 17th December 1737 and as president of the mint (1785-1816) contributed to the general reorganisation of the stamping of gold and silver articles, and also promoted legislative regulations for the manufacturers and sellers of precious metals. He was created Cardinal in the Consistory of the 8th of March 1816 and died on October 23rd of the same year.

Of Pasinati very little is known except what his works reveal to us. Beside the medals already cited, he worked for the Roman mint and to him belong the scudo of 1815 (Cin. 23) and that with the portrait of 1816 (Cin. 24). He evidently only worked very little for the mint from 1815-1819 as he could not have been engaged before the return of the pope to Rome, that is to say on the 7th of June 1815.

Another example of this famous coin is in the Vatican collection. To prove the interest which Pius VII had for all productions of the mint it is to be remembered that under his reign the dies of the medals from Martin V to his day were reunited in special rooms at the mint; and dictated by Ab. Amati the following epigraph was placed to commemorate the event:

We have received the following cutting out of a local newspaper, from a correspondent in Ceylon, respecting the new minor currency for the island.

Not the least of the boons which the New Year will bring to Ceylon is the new nickel coin. It is one in the credit for which we can claim some share, as we were, we believe, the first to voice the dissatisfaction with the ugly and ponderous five-cent copper "blob" and to advocate the substitution of a smaller and handier coin. The opposition to the reform, and the delay in conceding it, have been accountable only by the innate conservatism of bureaucracy, and we venture to say that, after a year's experience, we shall wonder more than ever why the old copper five-cent piece was suffered so long. The new coin will be a patent factor on the side of economy and coolies in this country. The uncomfortable possessor of it has, as a rule, been only too glad of an excuse to get rid of the old five-cent piece to the first comer, and in this way a lot of what Mr. Lloyd-George would call unearned increment went into numerous undeserving pockets, the effect probably being somewhat demoralising. The nickel piece will also hit those who are largely dependent on gratuities by usurping the position hitherto occupied by the ten cent piece as the recognised pourboire; but there will be some compensation in the fact that, with a reasonable coin handy a good many tips will be given which were withheld before. In other respects the most that can be claimed for the new coin, as our readers can see, is that it is small and neat. It certainly is not very artistic. It will be obtainable in January at the Banks and at the Treasury.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.

March 23. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — Mrs. F. E. Dixon, Miss E. M. Cripps, and Messrs. T. K. Mackenzie, C. Pryer, and F. A. Walters were elected Members. The evening was devoted to the consideration and exhibition of war-medals.

Miss Helen Farquhar introduced the subject by exhibiting a few specimens from her collection of Stuart badges, and read a paper on their possible use as military rewards during the Civil War. She adduced documentary evidence to prove that both King and Parliament awarded badges to those, such as Welsh, who distinguished themselves in action, quoting the Forlorn Hope and Dunbar medals. In some cases she traced the portraiture by Rawlins to its prototypes in Van Dyck's pictures, notably the King's three-quarter-length figure on the Edge Hill medal, which, apart from Lely's copy, was our only reminiscence of the original picture, destroyed in the Whitehall fire.

Major Freer contributed a monograph on the history of war-medals as illustrated by those awarded to the officers and men of the old 43rd Foot and Monmouthshire Light Infantry, now the Ist Battalion Oxfordshire Light Infantry. In tracing the story of the regiment from its origin in 1741 he was able, by biographical notices of individual officers and men, to identify many of the names on the large collection of these medals which he exhibited. Mr. H. C. Lea addressed the meeting on the medallic history of the same regiment, and exhibited almost a complete series of its medals.

Mr. Winter, on behalf of Mr. S. M. Spink, exhibited specimens ranging from Blake's famous medal to two examples of the modern Victoria Cross, and including the original Seringapatam award in gold, of which only thirty were struck. — An interesting contribution by Mr. E. E. Needes contained the Waterloo medal of a troop sergeant-major of the Inniskillings, who was "in the thick of the fight, remaining on the field two days and three nights with nineteen lance and sabre wounds," and yet survived until 1825. — Mr. B. W. Russell exhibited a representative series awarded to the officers and men of the Leicestershire Regiment, ranging from the capture of Louisburg in 1758 to the present time. — Lieut.-Col. Morrieson showed the Japanese war-medal, and, on behalf of Mrs. Hitchins, the gold medal awarded to her father-in-law Lieut.-General Hitchins in the Burmese War of 1826; and Dr. Stanley Bousfield produced the original puncheon for stamping the reverse dies of the medal from the London Highland Society to the Black Watch, recording the death of Sir Ralph Abercromby in 1801.

OF THE

BY W. H. VALENTINE.

This work, which it proposed to issue shortly, is designed to popularise the study of Muhammadan copper coins, and is the outcome of a student's endeavour to identify and arrange them. To this end the author has made faithful drawings of all the specimens of this class of coin that he has been able to find. Commencing with Turkey, the reader is taken numismatically through Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, to Nigeria (for which place the Royal Mint has recently struck a new coinage) and from thence back to East Africa and Arabia. Crossing from there to Europe, the tour continues throught the Crimea, Georgia, Persia, Afghanistan, Bukhara, and terminates in Chinese Turkistan.

Upwards of 900 coins struck during the last three centuries are illustrated, and the Arabic inscriptions carefully transliterated and explained. To assist in the classification of the coins, a geographical arrangement has been adopted, and six coloured maps have been added to enable the reader to locate the various mints.

The interesting field covered by this work has never as yet been dealt with, possibly on account of the great expense involved. It has been suggested that this may be lessened by using the line block process, and printing the major portion in manuscript form. The author hopes that sufficient promises of support will be received to enable the book to be published at a price not exceeding 10/6 a copy, and he trusts that numismatists generally will give the project a hearty support.

N. B. Since the above announcement was prepared orders for over a hundred copies of Mr. Valentine's work have been received by the author and ourselves. It is therefore now confidently hoped that sufficient encouragement may yet be accorded so that the publication of so valuable and unique a work of reference may not be much longer delayed.

It may be mentioned here that it is proposed to strictly limit the edition to 500 copies.

Illustrated specimen-page with Order-form, on application to Spink and Son, Ltd.

I have had an opportunity of seeing what Mr. Valentine's proposed work is like, and I can confidently say that it will be of great use to Numismatists, who are often puzzled in assigning their Eastern Coins to the exact localities to which they belong — especially to such as have not the time or opportunity of studying the languages so essential to their elucidation.

Every coin named is fully illustrated and explained : and from one such, very often several others can be successfully allocated.

Its value will be appreciated the more as its pages are consulted.

GREEK COINS

The Bruttians did not begin to coin money bearing their own legends until after their alliance with the Lucanians about 282 B.C. At that time they had become civilized by intercourse and intermarriage with the Greeks, whose cities they had conquered, but they had not lost their courage, nor the physical strength inherited from their forefathers. Their prosperity increased after the wars of Pyrrhus, when they submitted to the Roman rule, and their coinage was mostly issued during the period of peace which they enjoyed before the second Punic war began. The story of their rise from barbarism, as told by Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, and Justin, is so interesting that extracts from those writers are here given in preference to any general sketch made by combining the various legends.

The region they conquered and inhabited is that mountainous peninsula lying to the south of a line drawn from Laus to Thurium. The earliest Greek writers who described this region called its inhabitants Oenotrians, and Strabo tells us that Pandosia was the residence of their kings. Antiochus, quoted by Strabo, gave the name of Italy to this region, but previously it had been called Oenotria.

The Greeks settled on the east coast at Croton, Caulonia, and Locri, probably as early as the seventh century B.C. and on the west coast at Rhegium, Hipponium, Tempsa, Terma, and Laus. The interior, covered with forests and high mountains, was but thinly inhabited by the Oenotrians, who readily accepted the civilization of the Greek Colonists, and were not strong enough to give them much trouble.

The invasion of the Lucanians soon after the year 390 B.C. was the first serious check to the power of the Greek cities. The Bruttii were descendants of the Lucanians who settled among the Oenotrians of the mountain region. Strabo gives the following account of their origin.

"The nation received its appellation from the Lucani, for they call runaways bruttii, and they say that formerly they ran away when employed as shepherds, and that, afterwards, their independence was established through the weakness of the Lucani, when Dionysius was prosecuting a war against the younger Dionysius, and fomented hostilities amongst all" (Lib. VI, p. 255).

Diodorus Siculus gives a similar account of the origin of the Bruttians (lib. XVI, c. xv).

In treating of the year 356 B.C. he says. "In this year a multitude of men, gathered from all parts, and largely composed of runaway slaves, came together in Lucania. They had led hitherto the life of brigands, and the habits of living in open camps, and making frequent raids, gave them experience in warfare.

Their power grew through their victories over the inhabitants of the land, and at length they took by assault, and sacked, the city of Terina; then they conquered Hipponium, Thurium, and many others, and established their government in all. In time they received the name of Bruttii, because the greater number of them had been slaves, and because in the language of that country runaway slaves are called by that name. Such is the origin of the race of the Bruttii in Italy. In 324 they beseiged Croton, but were repulsed by the citizens aided by the Syracusans."

The account of the Bruttii given by Justin contains more interesting details (liber XXIII, c. 1).

He begins by telling how Agathocles came over from Sicily to Italy "Wherefore the Bruttii were his first enemies, who seemed then the bravest and the wealthiest, and at the same time ever ready to injure their neighbours: for they had driven away the citizens of the Greek cities from the land.

They had likewise conquered in war the Lucanians, their own kin, and had made a peace with them upon equal terms. Such was the violence of their tempers that they would not spare those from whom they were descended. For the Lucanians used to educate their children in the same manner as the Spartans. From the commencement of manhood they were kept in the woods among the shepherds, without any attendance of slaves, without any clothes to wear or to lie upon: that from their early years they might be inured to hardness and frugality, without any intercourse with the city.

Their meat was game taken in hunting, their drink either milk or spring water. Thus were they hardened for the toils of war. Of these men about fifty at first used to carry off plunder from the lands of their neighbours, these were joined by numbers flocking to them, being tempted by the booty, and when they had grown numerous they infested the country. Wherefore Dionysius the tyrant of Sicily being wearied of the complaints of his allies had sent 600 Africans to quell them, whose castle they took, it being betrayed to them by a woman named Bruttia, and there they built a city.

The shepherds flocking in on account of the fame of this city called themselves Bruttians from the name of the woman. Their first war was with the Lucanians, the people from whom they were descended. After their victory they made a peace upon equal terms, and then subdued by their arms the rest of their neighbours. Finally Alexander of Epirus was cut off by them with all his army".

Justin's account of the origin of the name is very unlikely to have been the true one; the later versions of Justin's legend given by Jornandes (de Reb. Get 30) and by Paulus Diaconus (Hist., II, 17) give to Brettia the dignity of a queen.

Stephanus of Byzantium gave another equally unlikely origin for the name. He derived it from a mythical hero Brettus a son of Heracles (βρέττος) by Valentia. Stephanus played upon the name Brundusium in a similar way, and derived that name from one Brentos a son of Heracles also!

The date at which the name of the Bruttii was generally used is difficult to fix, for Diodorus of Sicily speaks of the Bruttii as having expelled the remainder of the Sybarites who had settled on the river Traens after the destruction of their own city (XII, 22).

This was in 443 B.C., and the usual date given for the rise of the Bruttians into notice and power was 356 B.C., that is nearly a century later, as given by Diodorus himself (XVI, xv).

Stephanus of Byzantium cites Antiochus of Syracuse as using the name Brettia for this part of Italy. The inaccuracy of this writer and his careless use of late legends deprive his evidence of value. It is remarkable, however, that the same authority is quoted by him as stating that Aristophanes used the word βρεττία as an adjective, (μελαίνη γλώσσα βρεττία) thirty years before the date assigned for the rise of the nation. Aristophanes died about 380 B.C. This statement however has not been proved, and seems unlikely.

When we put these legends together we understand how the wars waged by Dionysius and the Lucanians had so weakened the Greek cities that an opportunity was presented for the strong and violent men who roamed the forests of the peninsula to attack the cities and enrich themselves with their spoil. It the word Bruttii was really the word for run-away slaves, and was frankly adopted by them when in power and prosperity, they were doing what others have done in like circumstance, for instance, the "Beggars" of the Netherlands.

The Bruttians first appear as an important military power in the time of the war with Pyrrhus.

In the year 281 B.C. the Bruttians took part with Pyrrhus in the defeat of the Romans at Heracleia, and they also fought with Pyrrhus at Ausculum in 279 B.C., but two years afterwards the Romans defeated them near Thurium under C. Fabricius, and a peace was made involving the loss of half the forest of Sila, which was valued highly for its timber and pitch. During the First Punic war the Bruttii remained at peace, that is from 264-241 B.C. Hamilcar Barca's ravages along the coast affected only the cities along the shore and the main stress of the war was felt in Sicily and on the seas.

The Second Punic war began so disastrously for the Romans that the Bruttians rose again and joined the armies of Hannibal in 216 B.C. after the defeat at Cannæ (Livy, XXII, 61). Petelia and Consentia tried to keep loyal, but were forced to join the revolt, and soon after the Locrians and citizens of Croton followed their examples, Rhegium alone holding firmly to the Roman alliance.

In 215 B.C. Hannibal's lieutenant Hanno fled into Bruttium when defeated by Tib. Gracchus.

The wild forest-clad mountains made the land a natural fortress, into which Hannibal retreated after the defeat of Hasdrubal, as we read in the last lines of Livy's book XXVII. Hannibal made his head quarters near Scyllaceum, where a small town received the name Castra Hannibalis.

The Bruttians were severely punished by the Romans, refused the right to rank as allies, and pronounced incapable of military service, being only employed in menial occupations. To complete their subjection, Roman colonists were established at Tempsa, Croton, Hipponium and Thurium (Livy, XXXIV, 45; XXXV, 40).

THE GOLD COINS 282-203 B.C.

In the British Museum seven specimens of the gold coins of the Bruttii are preserved; four of the first type and three of the second.

I. Size .6. Weight : 65.2 grains and 65.5.

Obv. Head of Poseidon, diademed, to left; behind, a trident to right : beneath, a bucranium : border of dots.

Rev. BPETTIΩN. Amphitrite ? veiled, and draped, seated to left on a seahorse swimming to right, she holds in her right hand an Eros, drawing his bow to left, in the field to right a bee : border of dots.

The symbols on the other specimens are a cornucopiae, a murex, and a star of eight rays.

II. Size .55. Weight 32.7 and 32.6.

Obv. Head of bearded Heracles to left, wearing lion's skin, behind, a club : beneath Γ : border of dots.

Rev. BPETTIΩN. (in exergue). A biga to right driven by Nike, the horses galloping : beneath them Γ, and a caduceus to right : border of dots.

On the other specimens the symbols are a serpent coiled, and a thunderbolt.

It is noticeable that the gold coins are rougher in workmanship than the earlier of the silver coinage and this is unusual, for the dies of the gold coins were generally more carefully prepared than those of the silver.

The date of issue of the gold coins should from their style probably be placed about 250-230 B.C.

The head of Amphitrite on the Reverse is too large in proportion to the figure, and the lettering of the legend is very rough.

The style is very like that of the Roman denarii.

Mr. G. F. Hill, in his work Historical Roman coins, p. 43, dates the Roman gold pieces of 60, 40, and 20 sesterces as belonging to the year 241 B.C. contra Dr Haeberlin who assigns them to the year 217 B.C. Mr. Hill thinks the special need for this gold issue in 241 B.C. was the payment of the fleet which won the victory at Aegusa. Did the Bruttians help the Romans then, and was their issue of gold a part of this preparation for the close of the first Punic war ?

The types of Poseidon and Amphitrite point to a naval subject.

SILVER COINS OF THE BRUTTII 282-203 B.C.

I. Size .85. Weight : 86.1 grains or 5.58 grammes.

Rev. BPETTIΩN (in exergue). The Dioscuri on horseback to right, clad as on Obverse, with their right hands raised, and carrying palms in their left hands; the horses are prancing : above their heads two stars : below, a knotted club to left, in field to left, Γ : plain border.

The workmanship of these coins is Greek and superior to that on the coins of the Romans. They must have been executed in one of the old mint cities of the Greek Colonists, perhaps Locri as we find the type on coins of that city. This silver coinage of the Bruttii is exceptional as the Romans forbad other cities to issue silver after 268 B.C., when their denarii were issued.

Possibly at Tarentum and Neapolis some silver was also permitted to be coined.

II. Size .8. Weight : 72.4 grains or 4.66 grammes.

Obv. Head of Amphitrite to right, wearing veil, stephanos, earring and necklace; over left shoulder a sceptre : behind, an amphora : border of dots.

Rev. BPETTIΩN. Poseidon naked, stooping to left, his right foot advanced resting on an Ionic capital; in his raised left hand a long sceptre, his right elbow resting on his right knee : in field to left a crab : at his feet Γ : border of dots.

Four varieties differ in the symbols on the Obverse: a bucranium, a dolphin, a fly, a cup; the last three are signed with the letter Γ.

Same style as No 1. The head of Poseidon too large in proportion and legs too shortfaults found however frequently during that period.

Mommsen (Hist. Rom., Vol. I, p. 493), says : "The Bruttian coins stand so entirely in point of artistic treatment on a level with the contemporary coins of Greece that the inscription alone serves to distinguish the one from the other."

III. Size ·8. Weight : 68.2, 71.3, 75.6 and 78-3 grains.

Rev. BPETTIΩN : Naked youthful horned figure crowning himself with his right hand, and holding, in his draped left, a long torch; in field to right, a crab and Γ : border of dots.

On other specimens the symbol on Reverse is a thunderbolt and on others a rhyton (drinking cup) and Γ : on others a round buckler, or an incense altar and Γ a serpent erect and Σ. a wreath, the letter Γ or ٦ on the monogram ⍓.

These are similar to the last in style, the figure on the Reverse is rather better in proportion than that of Poseidon.

The horns are the emblems of a river god such as Crathis.

IV. Size ·65. Weight : 30.6 or 35.4 grains.

Obv. Head of Apollo, to right, laureate, with flowing hair; behind, an anvil; below, Γ : border of dots.

On another specimen the symbol is a star of eight rays. Similar style as those previously described, but perhaps rather more like that of the Roman denarii.

V. Size .6. Weight 33.8 grains.

Obv. Head of Pallas to right, wearing earring and necklace, and crested Corinthian helmet on which is a griffin : border of dots.

Rev. BPETTIΩN. An eagle standing to left with wings open, on thunderbolt : behind a rudder and Γ : border of dots.

On another specimen these is an owl behind the head on the Obverse.

The Reverse is a well-designed bold type.

The types on these gold and silver coins are interesting as witnessing to the religious influences which affected the Bruttians.

The Dioscuri were regarded as warriors' gods not only by the Greeks but also by the Roman and Italian tribes as early as the year 496 B.C. when the battle of Lake Regillus was fought.

Their appearance among coins bearing the head of Poseidon shews the Graecian origin of their cult among the Bruttii. They were regarded as protectors of seafaring men, for Poseidon had granted them power over the winds and waves (cf. Euripides Helen 1495) "May ye come o sons of Tyndarus driving your horse-chariot through the sky, under the eddyings of the stars, ye who dwell in heaven, preservers of Helen upon the dark blue wave of the sea, and the cerulean foam of the waves, whitening on the sea, sending to sailors gentle gales of winds from Jove. »

We may also refer to the lines of Horace (Carm. I, III) " so may the bright stars, the brothers of Helen, and so may the father of the winds confining all except Japyx, direct thee O ship, who art entrusted with Virgil, my prayer is that then mayst land him safe on the Athenian shore ".

Confer the notes on the introduction of the type of the Dioscuri at Poseidonia by the Lucanians in "Coins of Magna Graecia" (pp. 107. 108).

The type of the Bruttians may have been copied from the bronze coins of Locri (cf. p. 234. Coins of Magna Graecia, n° 10).

A head of one of the Twin brethren with a star, appears also on bronze coins of Neapolis 250-200 B.C. (Cf. p. 300, Coins of Magna Graecia, type VIII).

The connection of this type with the influence of Pyrrhus at Tarentum is noted also in the Coins of Magna Graecia (pp. 6, 7, 12, 13, 29).

There is however another connection of the Dioscuri with the early Greek Colonies of Bruttium mentioned by Justinus (XX, 3).

"The Spartans not wishing to help the men of Locri bade them ask assistance of Castor and Pollux, nor did the ambassadors despise the answer of their allied city, but going into the next temple and offering sacrifice they implore the assistance of the gods..... they make beds for them on the ship and going with lucky omens they bring comfort instead of assistance to their countrymen."

"In the wings likewise two young men in different suit of armour from the rest, of an extraordinary bigness were seen fighting upon white horses, and in red robes, nor did they appear any longer than the battle lasted."

This battle took place about 520 B.C., and we have in this legend ample reason for the popularity of the cult of the Dioscuri in Bruttium.

The types of Poseidon, Amphitrite, Apollo, and Pallas are witnesses to the thoroughness with which the Bruttians accepted the teaching of the Greeks.

The same may be said perhaps of the type of the nude horned figure on the type no III of the silver coins. The horns suggest that we have here the figure of a river god. A figure of the river god of the Crathis is found on coins of Pandosia (Coins of Magna Graecia, p. 189, 194).

As that river seems to be the most important in Bruttium the river god on these coins may be considered as the one probably represented on these coins.

L'OPERA DELETERIA DEI RESTAURATORI SUI MEDAGLIONI [1].

Pur troppo è naturale che gli oggetti tramandatici dall'antichità ci siano pervenuti in istato più o meno infelice di conservazione e in modo speciale gli oggetti destinati all'uso comune, al passaggio da una mano all'altra, quali sono le monete. È raro il caso che una di questa sia stata perduta o nascosta appena uscita dalla zecca e che abbia continuato il suo lungo riposo fino a noi; la massima parte, e specialmente quelle di bronzo, dimostrano d'avere avuto una più o meno lunga circolazione, e portano i segni di una vita lunga e attiva che ha attraversato tutte le ingiurie del tempo. Poco male quando si tratta di monete comuni; essendocene pervenute molte, è facile fare una scelta, scartando le peggiori; ma quando si tratta di pezzi rari, come i medaglioni, ognuno sa quanto limitata ne fosse la coniazione e gli esemplari che arrivarono fino a noi sono così scarsi, che nessuno va respinto, ma tutti debbono o dovrebbero essere religiosamente conservati da ogni serio raccoglitore.

Se di ciò solo si trattase, il mio non sarebbe che un vano rimpianto e nulla di più inutile che rimpiangere un male irrimediabile. Il peggio si è che, fino dai primi tempi in cui si incominciò a raccogliere, la serie dei medaglioni che, per la sua rarità, pel suo interesse e pel suo pregio artistico, forma la parte aristocratica della collezione romana, attirò di preferenza l'attenzione degli amatori i quali, mal sapendo rassegnarsi alla normale deplorevole conservazione di questi pezzi, concepì il vano desiderio di migliorarli. Tale desiderio, per quanto assurdo, trovò subito incisori compiacenti, più o meno capaci, più o meno coscienziosi, più o meno eruditi in numismatica, che leggermente se ne assunsero l'incarico e iniziarono l'arte civilmente vandalica del restauro.... E qui il rimpianto, se vano pel passato, può riescire utile per l'avvenire e mi auguro che le mie parole, confortate dagli esempi che sto per addurre, possano riuscire efficaci.

Il restauro è sempre cosa difficilissima e pericolosa e, se talvolta s'impone pei monumenti che minacciano rovina — limitatamente alla statica — o per oggetti d'arte i quali, per la materia di cui sono formati, accennano a deperire — limitatamente alla conservazione — è assolutamente un non senso per gli oggetti costituiti di materia solida e resistente, come il marmo e il metallo. Una statua esposta per parecchi secoli alle intemperie ha necessariamente perduto il primitivo splendore; l'acqua, il gelo, il sole l'hanno corrosa, striata, framentata anche in parte, ne hanno infine consunta la primitiva superficie. Ebbene, che si direbbe di uno scultore che si ponesse in mente di ridurla a nuovo? Si griderebbe, e ben a ragione, alla pazza profanazione e ognuno converrebbe nell'esecrazione di quel lavoro inopportuno e sacrilego, che, toglierebbe alla statua ogni pregio d'antichità, che distruggerebbe anzi completamente un'opera antica, producendone una moderna, per la quale non sarebbe certo mancata altra materia.

Eppure questa profanazione che tocca i limiti dell'inverosimile è precisamente quella cui molti rarissimi e pregevolissimi medaglioni furono sottoposti da un vandalico bulino che ebbe la stolta pretesa di aiutarli e migliorarli. L'enormità della cosa non; ma s'è punto capita nei tempi antichi e poco si capisce anche oggi la colpa d'oggi è assai più grave di quella d'un tempo, perchè la gravità di una colpa è sempre proporzionata all'ambiente in cui essa viene prodotta.

La bella trovata del bulino restauratore dei bronzi antichi la dobbiamo al secolo decimosettimo, a un periodo cioè nel quale il rispetto all'antico non era sentito, in un periodo in cui l'arte decadente si sovrapponeva allegramente ai capolavoro del trecento e del quattrocento, in cui gli ornamenti castigati e classici del rinascimento o dell'età gotica venivano mutilati o sopressi per cedere il posto alle deliranti volute del barochismo; a un periodo nel quale gli artisti non avevano scrupolo di demolire il colosseo per costrurre le chiese di Roma e i palazzi dei principi romani. Dato tale ambiente, lo sfregio che si faceva subire ai medaglioni col restauro può essere da noi nello stesso tempo deplorato e compatito; ma all'epoca nostra, in cui tutto si informa al massimo rispetto dell'antico, nessun compatimento può essere commisto alla deplorazione, e l'ignominioso delitto di lesa antichità non può più trovare alcuna attenuante.

Già altre volte nella Rivista e altrove ho deplorato questo guaio, e l'amico Laffranchi ha rincarato la dose nel Bollettino di Numismatica. Ma lo studio che in questi ultimi anni feci dei medaglioni, le ripetute visite ai principali Musei d'Europa, le moltissime impronte che ho radunato, mi hanno data l'amara persuasione che il danno arrecato dai sedicenti amici dell'arte e della scienza col restauro è assai superiore a quello che generalmente si suppone. La quantità dei monumenti da costoro sciupati è incredibile; tutti i Musei ne sono infestati, e oserei dire che forse un terzo dei pezzi esistenti offrono in grado maggiore o minore le traccie di questa voluta e irrimediabile deturpazione.

Vale dunque la pena di tornare sull'argomento e di tentare di far entrare in tutti la persuasione che il lavoro dei restauratori non è che un lavoro negativo e deleterio, non ad altro consacrato che a diminuire il valore originario o ad annullarlo completamente. Un pezzo antico, per quanto consunto, è sempre un documento e perde tanto del suo valore quanto è il lavoro che gli si fa intorno.

Molte volte i tipi o i caratteri di un medaglione antico sono

tanto consunti che ben poco rimane di visibile e la classificazione ne riesce assai difficile; ma i confronti con altri simili, se non identici, aiutano e bene spesso ne fanno raggiungere la completa identificazione. Ciò accade però quando la consunzione è naturale, quando cioè è dovuta unicamente alla lunga circolazione. Allora il poco che ancora rimane è genuino e vi si può fare assegnamento; mentre invece, quando il medaglione è passato per la mani del restauratore, esservi in origine. E troppe volte mancò anche la buona fede e i tipi nuovi si crearono per inganno.

Così ci rimasero molti monumenti con tipi alterati o fantastici, con leggende scorrette o impossibili, con date false o sconcordanti e perfino con attribuzioni cambiate, monumenti che per conseguenza hanno perduto ogni pregio artistico, ogni valore storico e non possono che indurre alla confusione e all'errore.

non c'è più mezzo di rintracciare la verità. Netti sono i tipi, chiare le leggende; ma non è più il documento antico che vi parla, bensì chi lo interpretò prima di voi, il restauratore. E chi ci assicura che la sua mano abbia seguito scrupolosamente le indicazioni originali? Troppe volte, anche in buona fede, essa seguì invece le indicazioni fallaci del cervello che la guidava e vi fece risaltare quel tipo o quella lettera che l'artista a ragione o a torto suppose dovesse teso e non avere dei lagni da chi punto non intendo colpire. So benissimo che generalmente le monete di scavo vengono alla luce ingombre non solo di terriccio, ma bene spesso di incrostazioni minerali e di ossidazioni metalliche, dalle quali rimangono deturpate e tavolta sono rese addirittura irriconoscibili. Queste materie eterogenee vanno levate. Levar queste però non vuol dire intaccare il metallo che costituisce la moneta e alterare la superficie primitiva. Distinguiamo bene tra ripulitura e ritoccatura. È un'arte la prima lodevolissima e mi inchino a chi la sa praticar bene, come ve ne sono : ma io non avrò mai parole abbastanza roventi per stigmatizzare la ritoccatura, anche quando non arriva al punto cui si giunse negli esempi che scelsi come i più tipici.

A prova di tali asserzioni varranno alcuni esempi che scelgo fra i molti che potrei produrre, esempi che aggiungo agli altri parecchi già interpolatamente segnalati nella nostra Rivista, non escluso l'ultimo appunto mio sul Medaglione senatorio, dai quali risulterà con tutta evidenza come nel caso nostro l'arte del restauratore abbia prevaricato, esorbitando dalla sua missione.

Antonio Pio. — I pochi medaglioni (poco più di una trentina) del Museo Nazionale di Napoli, quasi tutti provenienti dalla Collezione Farnese, sono in gran parte — più della metà — più o meno gravemente ritoccati. Ne scelgo uno tipico, il cui rovescio e così descritto nel Catalogo di quel Museo : « L'Imperatore a sinistra « colla mano su di un timone appoggiato a un globo, l'altro braccio « proteso. Davanti a lui una figura virile che, piegato a terra il « ginocchio, trae qualche cosa da una cesta. » La descrizione, per quanto riferisca fatti e atteggiamenti che non si sanno spiegare, non fa che rispecchiare fedelmente la scena che il rovescio offre e non è ad attribuirsi alcuna colpa al Fiorelli se descrisse quello che aveva sotto gli occhi. Avrebbe però fatto bene ad avvertire che quanto gli appariva era opera di bulino moderno ; questo è evidente tanto al diritto che al rovescio del medaglione.

Io pure dal Catalogo del Museo di Napoli avevo riprodotto nella mia serie di medaglioni la descrizione più su citata ; solo, quando me ne venne spedita l'impronta, vi aggiunsi : « medaglione rifatto ». Ma quando più tardi mi arrivarono le impronte del Gabinetto di Parigi, mi si offerse la pietra di paragone in un medaglione, il quale per quanto in pessime condizioni di conservazione, è però allo stato vergine di ritrovamento. Confrontando i due rovesci, mi avvidi chiaramente come si trattasse del medesimo conio, qui genuino, là travestito. E il medaglione di paragone è quello col rovescio : « NAVIVS····· L'Augure Navio inginocchiato a destra in atto di « rompere una pietra al cospetto di Tarquinio che gli sta davanti. « Dietro Tarquinio un'altra pietra ». (Cohen, 392/567.)

Vedasi alla tavola come avvenne la trasformazione. Il n. 1 è l'esemplare di Parigi, il n. 2 quello di Napoli. La leggenda del rovescio, forse perchè incompleta e incomprensibile, venne soppressa completamente. Tarquinio venne camuffato da Antonino e, non sapendosi che fare della pietra cubica che gli stava accanto, la si transformò in un globo.... ovale. Per dare un significato a questo globo inventato e per occupare nello stesso tempo la mano sinistra dell'imperatore, si inventò anche un timone, abbassando il fondo. Non sapendosi poi indovinare l'atteggiamento dell'Augure che spezza la pietra, lo si convertì in un personaggio qualsiasi che trae qualche cosa da una cesta o che qualche cosa vi ripone. E con ciò un rarissimo medaglione, che offriva anche una variante nel diritto con quello di Parigi, avendo il busto corazzato, rifatto dall'uno e dall' altro lato, fu ridotto a un pezzo di metallo senza valore !

Marco Aurelio. — Un medaglione di Marc'Aurelio che ha sede nella mia collezione, ma che non l'onora punto, porta il rovescio GERMANICO AVG IMP VI COS III col trofeo germanico, quale si vede sul grande e sul medio bronzo ; ma, mentre il diritto, un po' ritoccato nelle lettere, è genuino nella figura di M. Aurelio e permette di ritenere il pezzo autentico, il rovescio è completamente rifatto. Può darsi che sotto il rozzo lavoro posteriore esistesse appunto quel rovescio che ora vi si vede, e il medaglione sarebbe affatto nuovo ; ma chi potrebbe giurare che il nuovo rovescio non sia una completa invenzione moderna fatta ex novo su di un rovescio affatto differente? (n. 3 e 4).

Un secondo medaglione di M. Aurelio (n. 5 e 6) appartiene attualmente al Museo Vaticano e proviene da una collezione Vitali infestata come nessun'altra mai dalla peste del restauro. Porta al diritto una rozza testa di M. Aurelio colla leggenda : M AVREL ANTONINVS AVG. Al rovescio due cavalieri e la leggenda : PROF AVG.

Basta osservarne la riproduzione per vedere come il tipo sia stato grossolanamente ritoccato o, diremo meglio, rifatto sia al diritto che al rovescio, tanto che dell'antico si può dire non rimanga più nulla. Venne rispettata la leggenda del diritto ? Quello rappresentato al rovescio è il tipo originario, oppure è falsato? E la leggenda PROF AVG è originaria? Chi lo sa?

Faustina Juniore. — I Musei di Napoli e di Madrid si contendono il palio del ritocco su di un medaglione di Faustina juniore ; ma è Madrid che porta la palma.

Appartiene al Museo di Napoli un medaglione di Faustina rappresentante al rovescio Cibele assisa in trono fra due leoni col timpano e un ramo di pino. Alla sua destra, accanto al sedile Ati col pedo e la siringa e alla sua sinistra un albero da cui pendono due timpani (n. 7).

Il medaglione è tutto ritoccato a bulino ; ma pure lascia supporre che la rappresentazione sia originale in tutti i suoi particolari, armonici come disegno e distribuzione, razionali come concetto [1]. Ma osserviamo l'esemplare di Madrid (n. 8) dove l'artista, oltre che rinnovare, s'è presa anche la licenza col suo bulino di togliere e d'aggiungere a suo piacere. Ati è completamente scomparso ; ma la sua gamba e la parte centrale del suo corpo hanno costituito una gamba del trono o per megio dire hanno contribuito a formare uno sgangherato sostegno di detto trono, il quale ha così perduto ogni forma ; l'albero è pure scomparso, il ramo di pino venne transformato in un fascio di spighe con un papavero, per formare il quale l'artista approfittò di uno dei timpani che stavano appesi all'albero e di cui il secondo venne radiato. E non ho ancora finito. Cibele, spaventata da tanto massacro, ha volto sdegnosamente la testa e s'è preso un torcicollo !... L'artista s'è permesso anche questo nuovo abbellimento e lo fece con arte squisita!...

Credo che con questo medaglione raggiungiamo il colmo della profanazione. Eppure anche qui si trattava di due esemplari varianti pel diritto ; quello di Napoli portava la leggenda FAVSTINA AVG PII AVG FIL, mentre quello di Madrid portava quella più semplice FAVSTINA AVGVSTA. Due esemplari unici, di cui uno ha perduto la metà del suo valore e l'altro l'ha perduto completamente !

Commodo. — Il Medagliere Fiorentino non va esente — come del resto nessuno al mondo — dalla peste del ritocco nei pezzi più pregevoli ; ecco la trasformazione avvenuta in un medaglione di Commodo.

Le figure n. 12 e 13 rappresentano il medaglione originale di Commodo (esemplare di Madrid) col rovescio di Ercole a riposo che tiene per una zampa posteriore il leone nemeo.

Si osservino invece le figure n. 10 e 11. Queste rappresentano l'esemplare del Medagliere Fiorentino, nel rovescio del quale un ignoto artista ha mutato non solo il genere dell'animale ; ma al posto del capo ha collocato... la parte posteriore ; per eseguire la quale operazione, approfittò dell'ingrossamento e del rilievo che formavano la criniera del leone. Ora essa vuol rappresentare, pare, la groppa di un cavallo ; con quale significato e con quale relazione coll'Ercole, bisognerebbe domandarlo all'artista incisore... che fortunatamente per lui non tramandò il suo nome e il suo indirizzo ai posteri...

Nè lo scempio si limita al rovescio. Al diritto il bravo restauratore ebbe un certo riguardo per la bellissima testa di Commodo ornata dalla pelle del leone ed, essendo questa la parte meglio conservata della moneta, non credette necessario migliorarla. Ma la leggenda era consunta. Se si fosse degnato di consultare un esemplare simile — colle rappresentazioni d'Ercole ce ne sono parecchi — avrebbe trovato che doveva essere : L AELIVS AVRELIVS COMMODVS AVG PIVS FELIX ; invece preferì farne una nuova di pianta, nuova nelle monete di Commodo, completamente di sua invenzione e ve la scrisse con infelicissimi caratteri : IMP CAES M AVRELIVS COMMODVS ANTONINVS PIVS.

La nuovissima leggenda sarebbe da aggiungere alle molte di Commodo, se non portasse in sè il marchio della poca intelligenza numismatica di chi la compose, il quale dimenticò di mettervi il titolo d'Augusto !

Decenzio. — Nell'antica collezione Fontana esisteva un medaglione

1. E. a conferma della esattezza del tipo, accennerò che il medesimo rovescio si trova in un medaglione di Lucilla appartenente al Museo di Parigi, il quale è pure rovinato dalla ritoccatura, tanto che l'albero coi timpani vi fu completamente radiato (v. tav. I, n. 9) e si trova finalmente in un medaglione di Faustina madre ove fece la sua prima apparizione, pure appartenente al Museo di Parigi. L'esemplare è assai logoro, ma vergine e qui il tipo può essere studiato in tutta la sua genuinità.

di Decenzio dato per inedito, il quale corrispondeva alla seguente descrizione:

Obv. MAG DECENTIVS NOB C. Busto diademato a destra in costume militare armato d'asta e di scudo.

Rv. VICTORIA AETERNA AVGG (in giro) NOSTR (all'esergo). Vittoria che cammina a sin. con una palma e si rivolge a Decenzio che essa conduce per mano.

Cohen lo riporta sulla fede del Catalogo Fontana al n. 10 della sua prima edizione e 24 della seconda.

Ora il medaglione venne in mie mani e, come quello di M. Aurelio più sopra citato, appartiene alla mia collezione, interessando solo sotto il rapporto delle alterazioni. Con un ritocco goffo e ordinario, il medaglione è alterato da ambo i lati. Al diritto non solo venne aggiunto il diadema, che non esiste mai nè sui medaglioni nè sulle monete di Decenzio; ma venne convertito in uno scudo il globo niceforo; per ottenere il quale nobilissimo scopo, venne pure opportunamente accorciata la leggenda, terminandola con NOB C in luogo di NOB CAES, come vi stava scritto in origine.

Al rovescio poi, alla leggenda VICTORIA AVGVSTORVM, forse perchè consunta e illegibile o più probabilmente per farne un pezzo nuovo e inedito, vi venne sostituita l'altra: VICTORIA AETERNA AVGG NOSTR, occupando anche lo spazio originariamente libero dell'esergo.

Le figure 14 e 15 rappresentano il medaglione originale, quelle n. 16 e 17 il medaglione alterato.

E qui mi fermo; ma la brutta lista potrebbe avere una lunga continuazione. Credo che i pochi esempi citati possano bastare a eccitare il disgusto in tutti gli amici della scienza, dell'arte e dell' antichità in genere e a muovere una santa crociata contro tanta profanazione.

Un indizio confortante, che lascia supporre come tale idea incominci a farsi strada, s'è visto alle ultime vendite, nelle quali i pezzi ritoccati nessuno li ha voluti se non a prezzi meschinissimi in confronto ad altri anche di cattiva conservazione, ma nello stato vergine di ritrovamento.

Solo quando i raccoglitori si decideranno a rifiutare in modo assoluto ogni pezzo ritoccato, si persuaderanno per forza i restauratori che il loro tempo potrebbe facilmente trovare un impiego migliore.

By Roussel are a larger number of Jetons, besides a series of 60 medalets or playing counters, made in 1711, for the "Jeu de l'hombre" on which he represented subjects drawn from Ovid's Metamorphoses.

Dr Eug. Demôle of Geneva has just published a memoir in Revue suisse de numismatique, t. XVI, 1910 entitled : "Les Jetons représentant les Métamorphoses d'Ovide sont-ils l'œuvre de Jérôme Roussel, de Jean Dassier ou de Ferdinand de Saint-Urbain" and conclusively proved that the jetons in question are by Jérôme Roussel, who had them struck at Geneva. The dies apparently came into the possession of Jean Dassier, who in conjunction with a certain Barthélemy Favre, had the series restruck with three fresh dedication pieces to Philip Duke of Orleans to take the place of those issued by Roussel.

Roussel's jetons illustrating Ovid's Metamorphoses are: Lib. I. A. Dedication Jeton to Louis XIV, 1711, with: SON TRES HUMBLE ET TRES | OBEISSANT ET TRES FIDEL (sic) | SERVITEUR ET SVIET | JEROME ROUSSEL; — 1. The Chaos; — 2. The Creation of man; — 3. The Golden Age; — 4. The Seasons; — 5. The Silver Age; — 6. The Bronze Age; — 7. The Iron Age; — 8. Destruction of the Giants; — 9. The Council of the Gods; — 10. Lycaon metamorphosed into a wolf; — 11. The Flood; — 12. Repopulating of the Earth; — 13. Defeat of the serpent Python; — 14. Daphne changed into a laurel-tree; — 15. Io changed into a cow; — 16. Io on the borders of Inaca; — 17. The Sleep of Argus; — 18. The nymph Syrinx changed into Reeds; — 19. The Peacock adorned with the eyes of Argus; — 20. Io worshipped as Isis; — 21. Quarrel between Epaphus and Phaeton; — 22. The Oath of Cleimenes. — Lib. II. B. Dedication Jeton to the Dauphin Louis; — 1. The Palace of the Sun; — 2. Phaeton in the Sun's chariot; — 3. Phaeton's Fall; — 4. Phaeton's Tomb; — 5. Jupiter takes the form of Diana; — 6. Diana banishing Calisto; — 7. Calisto changed into a bear; — 8. Calisto and her son Arcas changed into Stars; — 9. Juno complaining of Jupiter; — 10. Retreat refused to the new Stars; — 11. Protection extended to Nyctimenes; — 12. The daughters of Cecrops discover Erectheus; — 13. Coronis changed into a crow; — 14. The Raven's colour changed from white to black; — 15. Ocyroë changed into a mare; — 16. The shepherd Battus changed into a touch-stone; — 17. Mercury enamoured of Herse; — 18. Pallas in Envy's grotto; — 19. Aglaura changed into a stone; — 20. Jupiter transforming himself into a bull. — Lib. III. C. Dedication Jeton to the Duke and Duchess of Burgundy; — 1. Cadmus in Boeotia; — 2. Cadmus avenging the death of his soldiers; — 3. Soldiers born from the Dragon's teeth; — 4. Cadmus builds the city of Thebes; — 5. Actaeon changed into a stag; — 6. Actaeon devoured by his dogs; — 7. Juno transforming herself into an old woman; — 8. Semele consumed by the lighthing of Jupiter; — 9. Bacchus fed by the nymphs of Nisa; — 10. Tiresias changes his sex twice; — 11. The Judgment of Tiresias; — 12. History of Narcissus; — 13. Bacchus before Panthaeus; — 14. Sailors changed into dolphins (a variety exists in M. Paul Bordeaux's collection at Neuilly-sur-Seine); — 15. Panthaeus torn up by his mother and aunts.

Jean Dassier, who acquired the dies of Roussel, issued the following additional Jetons of the above series: Dedicatory Jeton to Philip of Orleans, regent of France, 1717; — 1. Semiramis builds the walls of Babylon; — 2. Pyramus and Thisbe; — Unfinished die, represented Semele consumed by Jupiter's fire.

The Paris Mint Museum possesses 18 unfinished dies depicting various subjects of Ovid's Metamorphoses, which are copies of some of the above-described types, of a slightly smaller size, but Dr Demole does not decide on their authorship, and so they may be either by Jerôme Roussel or Jean Dassier.

Roussel's dies came ultimately into the possession of Ferdinand de St. Urbain (q. v.) who intended reissuing these jetons, but there is nothing to prove that he did so.

RUELLES, JEAN DES (also RUYELLES) (Flem.). Mint-engraver at Ghent, circ. 1419-1425. In 1421 he was also working at the Namur mint, probably during a temporary closing of the mints of Bruges and Ghent. Pinchart states that this Engraver is certainly the author of the coins struck at Ghent in 1419 and at Namur, 1421-1429, of which he gives a list in Revue de la numismatique belge, 1852, p. 295.

RUES, JEAN I. DES (French). Goldsmith of Moulins, appointed Mint-engraver there, 1554.

RUES, JEAN II. DES (French). Mint-engraver at Riom, circ. 1558-†1559.

RUFFIN, NICOLAS (French). Mint-master at Toulouse, circ. 1564-1566, privy mark, a crescent moon surmounted by a heart.

RUFTMEYER, JOACHIM (Germ.). Mint-master at Hamburg, 1692-1724. His initials I. R. occur on the coins he issued.

RUFUS (Rom.). Gem-engraver of the first century before our era. His signature: ΡΟΥΦΟC ЄΠΟЄΙ occurs on a cameo in the Ermitage Museum, representing Victory driving a quadriga. The engraver Rufus copied a picture by Nicomachos, thus described by Pliny: Victoria quadrigam in sublime rapiens. "This picture", says M. Babelon, which L. Munatius Plancus brought back from Greece to have it placed in the Capitol, is also reproduced on the reverse of a denarius, which the moneyer L. Plautius Plancus, struck at Rome about B.C. 45."

Koehler and Brunn ascribed this cameo to the sixteenth century, but Furtwängler maintains that it is antique. Some modern replicas exist.

Furtwängler (Jahrbuch, &c., 1889, p. 60) discusses at length the evident proofs of authenticity of this fine gem.

The signature ΡΟΥΦΟΥ occurs also on a Portrait-intaglio of Ptolemy Physcon (Vide RASPE).

Contemporary Bavarian Sculptor, residing at Munich, by whom are also some medallic works, amongst which a commemorative medal of the Inauguration of the Prince Luitpold Statue at Nuremberg, 1901. RUSKIN, JOHN (Brit.). Born in London, 1819. He graduated at the University of Oxford, and gained the Newdigate Prize for Poetry in 1839. Later, he studied art under Fielding and J. D. Harding, attaining an ordinary proficiency as a draughtsman, but never becoming a professional artist. Ruskin is known, however, throughout the English-speaking world as an art critic, and a brilliant and prolific, as well as original, writer upon art subjects. Not always temperate in his strictures upon existing art and contemporary arttists, he has frequently been the subject of severe criticism from rival critics; but, unquestionably, no work of its kind has been more widely read than Ruskin's "Modern Painters", and to no single work and to no single author does the world of art owe so much.

In 1867 Mr. Ruskin was appointed Rede Lecturer at Cambridge, and in 1869, Slade Professor of Fine Arts at Oxford. In 1871 he endowed the Taylor Gallery at Oxford with £. 5.000 for the maintenance of a master of Drawing, and he has generally spent the greater part of his private fortune in other schemes for art education and the public good.

Mr. Ruskin has furnished illustrations for "The Stones of Venice", and for the later volumes of "Modern Painters".

Ruskin, in his works on art, did not omit the coin- and medal-engravers' productions, and he certainly influenced in some measure present day British medallists. The famous critic had great power of observation and much skill in expressing that observation.

RUSMEYER, JOACHIM (Germ.). Mint-master at Hamburg, circ. 1694-1717. Ammon states that his issues are signed : I. R.

RUSPAGIARI, ALFONSO DA TOMASO (Ital.). Sculptor, and Medallist, born at Reggio d'Emilia, on 28. July 1521, appears to have died before 1577. Bolzenthal, D. Promis, and Armand, have ascribed to this artist a series of medals, mostly signed A. R. or AR. Very little is known about Ruspagiari's career. Balletti, who has made thorough investigations in the Reggian archives, has not been able to add much to the scant information given by former writers. He appears to have been descended from one of the patrician families of his native city, and was very well connected.

Portrait-medallion of a Lady.

He married in 1540; his wife's name was Ippolita. She presented him with four daughters: Filarida Anna, 12. March 1541; Dalia Anna, 31. May 1556; Celia, 1. February 1559; and Isabella. Contemporary documents show that he held a prominent position in the Council of Reggio, and that he was several times deputed to superintend public works.

The medals attributed to Ruspagiari are: Self Portrait, with legend: ALF. RUSPAGIARII. REGIEN. and on truncation of bust: IDEM A. R.; diam.: 78 mill. (illustrated); — Another, smaller (reproduced in Rassegna d'Arte, July 1901); — Camilla Ruggieri; signed: A. R.; diam.: 69 mill. (Rassegna d'Arte, May 1904, p. 45); — Lucia Ruspagiari; uniface; signed: A.R.; diam.: 63 mill. (Rassegna d'Arte, July 1901); — Alessandro Ardenti, painter of Faenza; signed: A.R. This medal has a reverse, whereas the preceding are uniface; diam.: 53 mill.; — A specimen of Alessandro Ardenti's portrait in the Rosenheim Collection is attached to the portrait of Agostino Ardenti, who may have been his brother; — Portrait-plaquette, uniface, of a Lady, veiled, with left shoulder; bare: 70 × 53 mill.; — Portrait-medallion, uniface, of a Lady, in oval frame; in front of her, profile of beardless man; signed: A.R.; diam: 68 mill. (illustrated); — Claudia Pancalieri; uniface; signed: A.R.; diam.: 65 mill.; — Filiberto Pingone, baron of Cusi, 1526-1582; dated 1573 and signed: A.R.; ℞. SAPIENTER AVDE. Eagle and peacock perched on a tree. A specimen, without the signature, is dated 1574 (According to Hill, this medal cannot be by Ruspagiari, and may even of Flemish origin); — Unknown Lady, in the attributes of Pallas, helmeted; uniface; 62 mill.

Testoni of Alfonso II d'Este for Reggio, 1571, have been ascribed to the artist also. Armand, and more recently, Balletti, have drawn attention to the great difference in style and execution between the medals just mentioned, and those signed AR, which may be by another artist, although Promis did not hesitate to give them to Ruspagiari, and that most of the personages represented are Savoyard, and especially the medal of Asdrubale Bambasi, who was a poet of Reggio, and consequently a fellow burgess of Ruspagiari, seems likely enough to be the latter's work.

Asdrubale Bambasi.

The following medals, signed AR, are described by Armand: Asdrubale Bambasi; uniface; diam.: 58 mill. (illustrated); — Emanuele Filiberto, duke of Savoy, 1528-1580; uniface; diam.: 76 mill.; — Carlo Emanuele, duke of Savoy, 1562-1630; uniface; 77 mill.; — Another specimen has a ℞. by Leone Leoni (the three Graces) affixed to it; — Marie de Grillet, contessa Pancalieri; uniface; 62 mill.; — Beatrice Langosco, contessa Scarampi; uniface; 54 mill.; — Jacqueline de Montbel et d'Entremont, wife of the famous French huguenot admiral, Gaspard de Coligny; diam.: 55 mill.; two reverses: (a) IN. TENEBRIS. LVCET. Five butterflies fluttering around a torch; (b) PREMITVR. NO. OPRIMITVR. Stormy sea from which emerges an anchor; — Unknown Lady, as Pallas, helmeted; legend: VIRTVTI. VICTRICI.; unsigned; uniface; 72 mill.; — Pietro Machiavelli of Lucca; signed: AAR. These medals cannot be by Ruspagiari, and M. Hill suggests Alessandro Ardenti, who worked in Lucca and Savoy, as their author.

To these Armand adds a medal of Ercole II. d'Este, fourth duke of Ferrara, 1508-1559, and Domanig, another of Alfonso II d'Este, 1533-1597, which he calls " in the art of Ruspagiari. "

"There exists " says Mr. Hill ", a group of medals signed: AR representing Charles Emanuel and Emanuel Filibert of Savoy, which have been without any reason attributed to Ruspagiari. With these (on grounds of style) may be classed a medal of Pietro Machiavelli of Lucca, which is signed: AAR. All these medals, as well as some others of Savoyan personages, signed AR, may possibly belong to Alessandro Ardenti, who worked in Lucca and Savoy. Ruspagiari should also be relieved of the medal of Filiberto Pingone, which has absolutely no relation to his style. Its high relief, method of dating on the truncation, its reverse design, its whole treatment and feeling, are as different from his as possible. Closely related, in the manner of treating the bust, to the medallist A.A. are Bombarda and the artist who signs S, and who has on quite insufficient evidence been identified with Niccolò Signoretti. We must for the present be content to place S alongside of A.A. as a probable pupil of Ruspagiari".

Ruspagiari's style betrays, say Balletti, the influence of Pastorino (1553-7) and Bombarda (1557-9).

On his return to Berne he settled down as an Engraver of seals, armorial bearings, &c. He was entrusted with the confection of the seal of the Bernese Grossrat, that of the Post Office, and many other official seals. The only medal that I known by him is the Federal Shooting Fête medal at Berne, 1830, which exhibits tolerable work. There are varieties. One specimen in bronze, probably unique, exists in M. RUTILIO GACI (Ital.). Caci or Cacius (q. v. Final supplement) was a Florentine nobleman, and a Sculptor in the service of Philip IV., king of Spain, at Madrid, during the first half of the seventeenth century. He was held in high esteem as an artist, and especially noted as a modeller in wax.

He likewise distinguished himself as a Medallist. His works betray the influence of Leone Leoni, and Jacopo da Trezzo.

Rutilio Gaci. Doña Beatriz de Rojas y Castro, 1618.

Don Pablo Bosch of Madrid possesses a Portrait-medal, uniface, depicting a man, aged about forty, accompanied by the legend: RVTILIVS CACIVS. MDCXV, undoubtedly the artist's self portrait; also, that of his wife, Dona Beatriz de Rojas y de Castro, uniface, and signed: RVT.CA (both illustrated, by kind permission of the owner).

The signature RVT or R° occurs also on two uniface medals of Philip III of Spain, and his consort, the Archduchess Margaret, daughter of the Archduke Charles of Styria. The latter is dated 1609. A medal, formerly in the Gutekunst collection had both portraits affixed; another is in the Madrid Museo Arqueologico Nacional, and a third is in Don Pablo Bock's cabinet. Both are described in Van Loon.

Herrera give an interesting monograph of Rutilio Gaci and dwells on his manifold activity in various branches of art and letters.

Alexander Rodulphius.

A further lead uniface medal with the same monogram was formerly in Mr. May Rosenheim's Collection, and is now in that of Don Pablo Bosch. The personage depicted, Alexander Rodulphius, appears otherwise unknown. I owe to the kindness of the above gentlemen the favour of giving an illustration of this interesting portrait-piece, which is undoubtedly the finest of the medallic works of Rutilio Gaci.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

April 14. — Dr. C. H. Read, President, in the chair. — Mr. G. F. Hill read a paper on the early use of Arabic numerals in Europe, and showed a number of tables illustrating the development of the figures after they were brought to the West. About 800 examples were arranged in chronological sequence under the various countries, and exhibited peculiar local forms in certain cases. They were derived from MSS., inscriptions on architecture, monumental brasses, bells, seals, paintings, coins and medals, woodcuts, printed books, and various other sources, chiefly English, Netherlandish, German, French, and Italian. There were instances of Arabic numerals in MSS. as early as the tenth century, but these numerals were not well known till early in the thirteenth century, and became general only in the sixteenth century, and became general only in the sixteenth. The figures 2, 4, and 7 were the best criteria for dating, the modern 2 being rare before the end of the thirteenth century, and the modern 4 and 7 appearing late in the fifteenth. The numerals on the façade of Wells Cathedral dated possibly from about 1250 — in any case not later than 1300. There were German brasses with Arabic figures dated 1383 and 1388, and seals still earlier, one being 1351; but other examples of seals with dates 1235, 1320, and 1331 were doubtful or not contemporary. French exemples were rare; Germany led the way as regards actual use, and Italy as regards development of form.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC SOCIETY.

April 21 — Mr. H. A. Grueber, V. P., in the chair. — The Rev. Edgar Rogers was elected a Fellow.

Mr. T. Bliss exhibited six shillings of Charles I. of the Tower mint with mint-marks lis, negro's head, plume (two varieties), bell, and harp; Mr. F. A. Walters, a specimen of the denarius, mentioned by Dion Cassius, struck in 42 B. C. by M. M. Junius Brutus with reverse, pileus and two daggers, EID. MAR. referring to the assassination of Julius Cæsar; and Mr. L. A. Laurence, the second known specimen of the silver penny of Wulfred, Archbishop of Canterbury, with reverse legend DOROVERNI CIVITATIS, one of the few Saxon coins without the moneyer's name. Dr. A. J. Evans showed the Roman medallions and coins mentioned in his paper; and Mr. P. H. Webb, a fine series of coins of Julian II. to illustrate his article.

Dr. A. J. Evans read a paper on 'Some Roman Medallions' in his collection. The pieces described were : (a) a bronze medallion of Clodius Albinus; reverse, Fortune seated left, FORT. REDVCI. COS. II., struck in 194 A. D., when the Senate made Albinus Consul for the second time; (b) a ten-aureus of Diocletian struck at Alexandria for the Decennalia in 293 A. D.; reverse, Jupiter enthroned with eagle at his feet, IOVI CONSERVATORI. in exergue ALE.; (c) the third example known of the double aureus of Constantine I. with reverse, view of the city of Treves, AUGG. GLORIA, probably struck 328-9 A. D., when Constantine was in Treves; (d) aureus of Gratian commemorating the accession of Valentinian II. reverse, Gratian and Valeus enthroned, between them the young Valentinian II., above his head a shield inscribed VOT. V. MUL. X., in exergne ANTS. Dr. Evans discussed the question of the denominations of Roman medallions; showed that the piece of Diocletian described was a ten- (not, as hitherto thought, an eight-) aureus piece; and suggested that the bronze medallions were also struck to a standard, the piece of Albinus being a piece of fifteen asses.

Mr. Percy H. Webb read a paper on the 'Coinage of Julian II.' After a sketch of Julian's career he proceeded to discuss the coins, which were shown to fall into three classes; (a) coins with beardless bust and title Cæsar, struck before 360 A. D., when he received the title Augustus; (b) a small class of coins with diademed, usually beardless bust and title Augustus, covering the period from shortly before the Quinquennalia of 360 A. D., to shortly after the death of Constantine II.; (c) coins with full bearded bust and title Augustus, covering the remainder of the reign. Mr. Webb showed that there is virtually no trace of pagan types on coins which can be definitely assigned to Julian, and that he seems to have been as careful not to hurt Christian susceptibilities as he tells us he was. With regard to the anonymous issues with personifications of Sarapis and Isis, Mr. Webb supported the traditional attribution to the time of Julian, and suggested they were unofficial issues of Alexandria. He showed that the Isis on these coins was not, as hitherto supposed, a portrait of Helena, and that the bull which occurs on the reverse of some coins bearing Julian's names is not Apis.

In the discussion on the papers Mr. Grueber, the Rev. Mr. Hands, Mr. Webb, and Dr. Evans took part.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC. — April 27. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — Miss. M. W. Clarke and Messrs. Hugh Cecil Lea and F. C. Frost were elected Members.

Mr. W. Sharp Ogden gave an address on ' Shakespeare, his Portraiture Medallic and Otherwise, ' in which he reviewed the history and expression of the most authentic of the portraits preserved to us, and traced their influence and inspiration in the by no means numerous or important series of commemorative medals and tokens bearing Shakespeare's likeness. These pieces range from the earliest by Dassier in 1731 to the memorial by Wyon in 1864, and their limitations and deficiencies were severely criticized by the lecturer. Shakespeare, he contended, still awaited his numismatic apotheosis, and it was essential that an effort — national by preference — should be made to perpetuate in medallic form the true portraiture, not only of Shakespeare, but of other great Englishmen, whose pictorial presentment we were carelessly allowing to pass into stereotyped conventionalism, Whilst dwelling on the importance of vitality in portraiture and the insufficiency of merely featural correctness, he mentioned the striking and life-like presentments produced by the medallists of Greece and Rome as examples of true art, preserved in an indestructible form for thousands of years.

A newly discovered and remarkably life-likeoil portrait of Shakespeare was then unveiled, which, Mr. Ogden explained, had been preserved for many generations by an old Lancashire family as the portrait of the bard. The subject represented the face turned slightly to the spectator's left, showing the characteristic nose, eyebrows, mouth, big forehead, falling brownish hair, with trimmed moustache and short beard, the collar and costume being of the fashion of the day. The effect was described as a striking presentment, distinct from, yet in absolute accordance with, the accepted likenesses. The canvas measured 21½ in. by 16½ in., and was of the web peculiar to most English portraits of the early part of the seventeenth century.

Although Dr. Martin urged that no portrait said to represent Shakespeare should be accepted without both external and internal evidence of authenticity, and mentioned the Droeshout engraving as the only trustworthy memorial in this respect, the general feeling of the members present was in favour of Mr. Ogden's attribution.

Mr. Ogden also exhibited numerous engraved portraits and photographs for comparison ; and an almost complete series of the medals, coins, and tokens bearing Shakespeare's bust was shown by Mr. Hamer and Mr. Fletcher.

Mr. F. A. Walters exhibited a set of the earliest issue of Elizabeth's money, that with mint-mark lis, ranging from the half-sovereign to the silver penny. Major Freer showed a series of war medals in continuation of the subject of his paper read at the preceding meeting; and Mr. Henry Garside examples of the recently issued money for Jersey, Ceylon, and Australia.

CORRESPONDENCE

To the Editor of the Numismatic Circular.

An early London Tradesman's Token.

In August 1908 (col. 10802) you were good enough to illustrate a specimen in my possession of a token of RICHARD WEYON IN CHEPE, and you suggested in an editorial note that you would regard it as dating from Richard III (1483-1485).

I had searched in vain for any record of the name of this man Weyon, but have recently found in the Calendar of Letter Books of the City of London, II, p. 385, the following entry which though 100 years earlier, you may care to quote in connection with this piece.

" 1 Sept. 10 Richard II [1386] John Salesbury, keeper of the Water of the Thames, brought before Sir Nicholas Brembre, the mayor [and others] a net belonging to Richard Weyn of Wolwyche, declaring it to be destructive of fry. The net being examined and found to be unlawful, was ordered to be burnt."

I have given the token to the British Museum.

Yours faithfully

C. DAVIES SHERBORN.

REVIEWS.

Musica in Nummis. Beschreibendes Verzeichnis von Medailleurarbeiten auf Musiker (Komponisten, Virtuosen, Musickschriftsteller, Instrumentenmacher etc.), ferner Sänger und Sängerinnen von XV. Jahrhundert bis auf die heutige Zeit. Herausgegeben von Karl Andorfer und Richard Epstein. 4° Wien, 1907. 199 pp. + IX Plates.

To collectors who specialize in certain series monographs of the kind of the present work should prove of great value. Publications of a similar nature already exist on medallic works relating to Medicine, to Railways, to Numismatists, etc. and have aroused an interest that is beyond question. It is therefore a matter for congratulation that Messrs Andorfer and Epstein should have published for general use the Catalogue before us of all the Medals, Plaquettes, Jetons, etc., known to them, relating to Musicians (including Composers, Virtuosi, Writers on music, Musical instruments makers, Professional Singers, etc.).

The work is supplemented by an Index of Names and nine heliotype Plates.

To give an idea of how exhaustive the list is we would mention that the compilers have included all the various types of Händel Tokens issued for Norwich, Coventry, London, etc., which are described under nos 705-730. Some of these are also reproduced on Pl. VII.

UNIQUE IRISH PENNY.

I have recently added to my collection a hitherto unpublished penny of George IV, the existence of which I was not aware at the time when I published my " Copper coinage of Ireland. The coin is as follows.

Obv. — Laureate & draped bust of the king to left, of the usual Pistrucci type, GEOR : IV D : G : BRI : REX.

Rev. — A harp with nine strings, upon the back are three trefoils & a dot beneath. Above is HIBERNIA, and beneath is the date 1823.

The obverse of this coin is identical with the obverse of the pattern $\frac{1}{50}$ dollar of 1823 prepared for Colonial use.

FAMOUS MEDALS.

£ 235 for a New Zealand cross.

At Waterloo Lord Hill — Wellington's Ney — headed the brigade which swept the Old Guard off the field. In peace times he succeeded his old chief as Commander-in-Chief in 1828, and died a Viscount in 1842. Yesterday there was a fight at auction over his orders, decorations, and medals, and when the last bid had been fixed at Sotheby's, Messrs. Spink's victory cost them £ 1.010. The group consisted of twenty-nine pieces, among which were the large Egypt 1801 gold medal, a general officer's Peninsular gold medal and gold cross, various stars, badges and collars of the Order of the Bath, and the insignia of several foreign orders. In the continuation of the sale of the Robert Day collection of medals appeared the Victoria Cross awarded to Captain John Augustus Wood, of the 20th Bombay Native Infantry, for valour at Bushire, Dec. 9, 1856. It was accompanied by three Indian medals and various papers, the set realising £ 101 (Spink). Another Victoria Cross with two dates, June 7, 1855, and Aug. 4, 1855, awarded to an officer whose name was not disclosed, along with the Legion of Honour and Medjidie Order, brought £ 84, and other military reminders were the Talavera gold medal granted to Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Seymour, of the 23rd Light Dragoons, £ 65 ; a field-officer's gold medal for the Battle of Vittoria, with clasp for the siege of San Sebastian, awarded to Captain Francis Scott, 59th Regiment, killed in leading the forlorn hope at the latter assault, £ 85 ; a field-officer's gold medal for the Battle of Orthes, granted to Major Henry Bright, 87th Regiment, £ 83 ; and the Waterloo medal, a small miniature, and a gold and enamelled badge of the French decoration of the lily, awarded to Captain Gore Browne, of the Royal Foot Artillery, £ 45.

Some time ago a specimen of that rare award, a New Zealand cross, appeared at Sotheby's, and realised £ 171. It was a silver Maltese cross with a gold star on each limb, with " New Zealand" in a gold wreath of laurels. Twenty crosses were issued, and the one which came up yesterday was that granted to Antonio Rodriguez, a trooper in the Taranaki Mounted Volunteers, for noble and daring conduct in assisting and carrying wounded men from the field, notably on Oct. 2, 1863, at Poutoko, and on March 11, 1864, at Kaitake, in the Maori War. Yesterday this also fell to Messrs. Spink at £ 235.

KRUGER COINAGE.

One of the many questions which will have to be dealt with by the Union Parliament is that of the circulation of Kruger coinage in the Transvaal. At present this currency is not accepted as legal tender in any other Colony, and in consequence much inconvenience arises. With the union of the several States an arrangement will obviously have to be made under which there will be either a uniformity of currency or the recognition of Kruger coinage as legal tender throughout the sub-continent. For various reasons the latter plan is not likely to be adopted, and British coinage will in all probability become the only legal tender in the Transvaal, as it is in the other Colonies. For one thing, the Pretoria Mint, established in 1891, was abolished in 1903, and hence worn-out coins cannot be replaced. Between 1892 and 1900 the value of the coinage minted was £ 1,795,532 9s, of which gold coins absorbed £ 1,458,771 10s and silver £ 336,760 19s. The amount of Kruger gold in circulation is unknown, and there appear to be no reliable means of estimating it. Roughly, it is reckoned that from £ 170,000 to £ 200,000 is the amount of the Kruger silver held by the banks and the public throughout South Africa. Probably £ 70,000 is in the possession of the various banks, and the balance, £ 100,000 to £ 130,000, is in circulation amongst the public. The difference between the money held by the banks and the public and the amount minted is about £ 150,000. This sum cannot be accounted for, but may be held in part by the natives and in part by curio dealers and others. The exchange of British for Kruger coinage through the Royal Mint would involve a heavy loss to the Transvaal Treasury. A correspondent of the Transvaal Weekly understands that the coinage has not been withdrawn because of the expectation that the Union Parliament, like the Commonwealth, will establish its own mint. In any case, a loss will have to be faced, but with a South African mint it would not be so great, and it would not necessarily have to be borne by the Transvaal province alone.

ADVERTISEMENTS

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS

8vo. — 170 pp. — Illustrated. Price : 5/- nett.

" It must not be thought that " Common Greek Coins " is merely a catalogue of ancient Greek money, for it is far more than this. The describing of the coins is utilised to give a cleverly condensed, but most interesting, account of Greek history and mythology, commerce and progress in civilisation. The colonies and conquests of the Hellenes, their foolish feuds and transient friendships all come under survey and comment, and the usually erudite style of Greek numismatists is transformed into a brilliant and most readable essay upon the ancient Greek world. This first volume is provided with a useful index and catalogues of the monograms, initials, symbols, and various mint marks are duly set forth to the various chapters, assisted by numerous engravings of all the more important types."

COPIA IN LUCANIA.

In 194 B.C. the ruined city of Thurii was chosen as the site for a Roman Colony with Latin rights. Livy recounts the fact, and tells us the names of the triumviri Cn. Manlius, Q. Aelius, and L. Apustius (XXXIII, 53).

Strabo (VI, 263) says the Thurians " appealed to the Romans who in course of time, sent a colony when it was nearly deserted, and changed the name of the city to Copiæ ".

The old name however prevailed, for Caesar long afterwards called it Thurii (Civ. bell., III, 22).

Writing of the year 193 B.C. Livy (XXXV, 9) says : " In that same year Cn. Manlius Vulso, L. Apustius Fullo, and Q. Aelius Tubero led a Latin colony into the Thurian territory by the law proposed by Tubero. Three thousand footmen went, and three hundred knights, a small number compared with the amount of the land."

They were able to give thirty jugera apiece to the footmen and sixty to the knights. Livy does not name the Colony, and we gather its name from Strabo, and the legends of the coins.

The type of Isis.

This appears to be the only coin bearing the figure of Isis struck in Italian Magna Graecia, and the introduction of such a foreign type may be explained by the greater readiness of the Romans to receive strange religious rites and ceremonies.

Moreover in those days deities were often associated with localities, as the guardians of the soil, and therefore when the Romans in the year 194 B.C. sent a colony to the desolated lands of the Thurians they inquired what deity should be worshipped in a land of wheat and barley. If among the triumvirs were men interested in religious cults, the names of Demeter and Isis would be the first to be considered, and the choice of the Egyptian Isis rather than the Greek Demeter may have been made in order to avoid a cult of the conquered race and bring in a new cult for the new Colony. Isis was identified by the Greeks with Demeter, and Osiris her husband with Dionysus, because Osiris the god of the Nile was reported to have taught the Egyptians the use of the plough, and Isis his wife to have introduced the cultivation of wheat. This Egyptian cult had been long known to the Greeks, and had been established at Corinth, Megara, Phlius, Tithorca, and Troezona.

It had also spread as far as Sicily, and in the coins of Catana the head of Isis appeared as a type. This Egyptian type did not influence the city of Rome until the days of Sulla, and throughout the days of the Republic and the reign of Augustus it was opposed by the authorities of the state as a licentious and immoral cult. Those who wish to see an account of the Greek festivals of Isis will find them described in Pausanias (X, 32), and in Apulius (Golden ass).

A similar type is found on the uncia of Mateola described above among the coins of that city.

BRONZE COINS OF THE BRUTTII.

The deities represented on the bronze coinage of the Bruttii are Apollo, Mars, Bellona, Heracles, Jupiter, Nike, Persephone, Amphitrite, and Pallas.

The marine goddess, and the type of the crab, shew they were issued from a city on the sea shore, probably Croton, because we find that type on the bronze coins of that city (Coins of Magna Graecia, no 9, p. 179).

It is evident that the Bruttians employed Greek artists to engrave their dies, and the art is as good as that in the cities of the Greeks at that period.

THE BRUTTIAN CITIES.

Three of the towns in Bruttium issued coins bearing as legend the name of the city: Consentia, Nuceria, and Petelia.

The coins however of Consentia were issued before the city was conquered by the Bruttii, those of Nuceria and Petelia were probably issued after the city was in the hands of the Bruttii.

These three cities were all founded by the old native races and were never colonized by the Greeks, although the influence of the Greek artists is seen in the types of their coinage. The deities also represented on the coins are purely Greek, as for instance Artemis at Consentia, Apollo at Nuceria and Demeter at Petelia.

The artistic work of these three mints is probably quite as good as that of the same period in the cities of the Greek Colonists.

CONSENTIA.

On the coins of this city we find only the first three letters of its ancient native name KΩΣ, and we can only conjecture what it may have been, for the name Consentia is only the Latinized form of an Oenotrian name.

If the ENT is part of the original name we may conjecture the Oenotrians called it Κωσεντυμ and compare it with Tarentum, Uxentum, Buxentum.

In inscriptions, found at Polla, the name is spelt Κοσεντία and this also is the spelling of Strabo. The date of the inscriptions found at Polla is not recorded in any work easily seen, so their evidence is valueless for our purpose. Appian and Ptolemy spell the name with N, Κωνσεντία.

The coins of this city are interesting as having been struck before the rise of the Bruttians to power, and while the city was still under its own native government, but as Consentia became the principal seat of the Bruttian government its coinage is also interesting as that used by them. Strabo (Lib. VI, p. 256, Casaub) says "Next in order comes Cosentia, the metropolis of the Bruttii."

Livy (VIII, 24) tells the story of how Alexander of Epirus fled from the Greek Pandosia and Acheron only to meet his fate in Italy at Pandosia in Bruttium; "after having often defeated the armies of Bruttians and Lucanians, and taken Heraclea, a colony of the Tarentines, Consentia, and Metapontum from the Lucanians, Terina from the Bruttians"... then follows the story of his death in the Acheron.

During the second Punic War Consentia at first was loyal to the Romans, but was taken by Hamilco. Livy (XXIII, 30) says "having thus recovered Petilia the Carthaginian general marched his army to Consentia. The place was less obstinately defended, and in a few days he received its submission.

Their more ready submission is just what we should expect from the character given to the citizens by Lucilius, who alludes to them as possessing superior refinement to the rest of the Bruttii and as being more like the Tarentines and Sicilians (apud Cicero de fin. 1.3.

Livy describing the events of 213 B.C. says "at the same time in Bruttium out of twelve communities which in the previous year had gone over to the Carthaginians, two Consentia and Thurii, returned to their loyalty to Rome". He then explains why more did not follow their example viz. the stupidity of a bad man named Pomponius Veientanus (Lib. XXV, 1).

Livy also tells us how in the year 206 B.C. the Consul Q. Cœcilius led an army "in Consentinum agrum" and how after the flight of the people "Ea sine certamine tota gens in ditionem populi Romani rediit." The ultimate victory gained in 204 B.C. is briefly related by Livy (XXIX, c. 38) "eadem æstate in Bruttiis Clampetia a consule vi capta, Consentia et Pandosia et ignobiles aliae civitates voluntate in ditionem venerunt."

ARTEMIS.

Mr L. R. Farnell on his "Cults of the Greek States" says of Artemis "perhaps no other figure in the Greek Pantheon is so difficult to understand and explain" because the ideas connected with her cult are at first sight confusing and contradictory, "most of her cult is genuinely Hellenic.". The cult is found in its most primitive form in Attica, Laconia, and Arcadia.

Mr Farnell says "it was more widely spread than that of any other Hellenic goddess, and was established in the Greek Colonies of Sicily especially at Syracuse". Her most primitive cult was that of an independent goddess, connected with the waters, and with wild vegetation and beasts, reflecting in her character the wild life of the primitive men who lived by hunting and fishing rather than by agriculture.

She was λιμνᾶτις 'the lady of the lake', and Ἑλεία, the goddess of the marsh; and we find her at Syracuse with this character. In Magna Graecia, where Aristaeus and Pan were so popular, it is surprising that Artemis should not have received greater attention than the coins and the literature show to have been given to her.

Her head appears on the coins of Metapontum Æ. no 19 (p. 80, Coins of M. Graecia).

Tarentum Æ. type XI, 212-209 B.C. (ibid., p. 52).

Her figure is represented walking and with her dog on a coin of Thurium no 16.

In the Hist. Numorum Dr. B. V. Head says concerning the staters of Syracuse issued before 500 B.C. "The head in the centre of the Reverse may be assumed to be that of the presiding goddess of the island of Ortygia, Artemis, who is identified with the water nymph Arethusa."

Artemis is represented in the literature connected with Magna Graecia only apparently in the pages of Athenaeus, Theocritus, Pindar, and Diodorus. The former writer speaks of a cup dedicated to Artemis at Capua (lib. XI, § 77, p. 489 A).

"And we may to this day see a cup of that fashion at Capua, a city of Campania, consecrated to Artemis, and the Capuans assert that that is the identical cup which belonged to Nestor." Theocritus speaks of a grove of Artemis at Syracuse (II, 66).

Athenaeus also says Artemis was surnamed χιτωνη at Syracuse (p. 629 E).

Pindar in his second Pythian ode speaks of Ortygia the island off Syracuse as "the residence of the river-goddess Artemis".

Diodorus Siculus (V, 3) tells us that Artemis received from the gods the island of Syracusa which oracles and men have named Ortygia from the name of this goddess.

NUCERIA.

There were two cities called Nuceria, one in Campania called Nuceria Alfaterna, the coins of which all bear Oscean legends, and the other a city of Bruttium, near Terina, now called Nocera.

It is situated on a hill about four miles from the Tyrrhenian sea, and the mouth of the river Savuto. Considerable remains of an ancient city are still to be seen at Nocera, and by some scholars have been thought to be those of Terina (Millingen, p. 25, Ancient coins and, p. 58 of his Num. de l'anc. Ital.).

Stephanus of Byzantium mentions a city called Νουκρία as a city of Tyrrhenia, but he must mean on the Tyrrhenian sea.

PERIPOLIUM.

In the British Museum Catalogue on p. 398 a silver coin of Peripolium is described under Samnium. It weighs 9·8 grs. and in size it is ·45.

Obv. Head of Hera to left wearing stephane, and earring; behind, Æ : border of dots.

Rev. ΓΙΤΑΝΑΤΑΝ
ΓΕΡΙΓΟΛΩΝ

Heracles kneeling to right and strangling the lion with both arms.

Mommsen attributes these coins to Samnium on the strength of a passage in Strabo (V, p. 250).

"It is also said that certain Lacedaemonians came and lived among them (Samnites), and that this is the reason of their affection for the Greeks, and that certain of them are called Pitanatæ."

The whole of this however appears to be a mere fabrication of the Tarentini interested in flattering and conciliating to themselves a neighbouring people so powerful &c.

But no town named Peripolium is known in Samnium.

In the "Historia Numorum" Dr B. V. Head says (p. 91) Peripolium was an outpost of the Locrians on the frontier of their territory towards Rhegium.

It appears to have been occupied late in the fourth century (the date of its coins) by a colony of Pitanatæ, presumably from Pitane in Laconia, Peripolium is not mentioned in Smith's Geographical Dictionary.

Dr B. V. Head has kindly informed me that as two specimens of these coins have been found in Samnium it is quite likely that Peripolium from which the coins were issued was situated in that region. The types of these early coins are naturally unlike those of the Samnium bronze coins which belong to a later period i. e. after 290 B.C.

We must therefore no longer consider Peripolium as one of the Bruttian cities.

PETELIA.

Petelia is situated about twelve miles north of Croton, and three miles from the coast. It was probably looked upon as part of the territory of Croton, and the citizens of Petelia used the coins of that city. Petelia was originally however an ancient stronghold of the Chones, a tribe of the Oenotrians.

The city Chone in the same neighbourhood, and Petelia, are both said to have been founded by Philoctetes after the Trojan war.

Strabo thus describes the city (VI, p. 254, Casaub).

"Petelia is considered as the metropolis of the Lucani and is still well populated. It owes its foundation to Philoctetes who was compelled to quit Meliboea on account of civil dissentions. Its position is so strong that the Samnites were formerly obliged to construct forts around it for the defence of their territory."

Virgil (Æneid, III, 400, 401) refers to the same legend "Here stands that little city Petilia defended by the walls of Philoctetes the Meliboean chief."

The long note by Servius is interesting but adds nothing of numismatic interest.

Petelia is never mentioned as a Greek city probably because it was regarded as belonging to Croton. When however the Lucanians invaded the land, about 368 B.C., Petelia fell into their hands, and became their principal stronghold in the South. Petelia first became conspicuous in the second Punic War, when the citizens remained faithful to the Romans in 216 B.C. although the Bruttians threw off their allegiance. The city was besieged by the Bruttians, and by Hamilco, and was abandoned to its fate by the Romans.

Livy tells the story (XXIII, 20) of how the envoys from Petelia who came to ask help in Rome were moved to tears when assured that it was beyond the power of Rome to give them help. In another chapter (30) Livy describes the siege, etc. its horrors, famine reduced their strength so that they could not lift their arms : from the same passage we learn that Croton was invested by a Bruttian army, and fell, being defended by only 2000 citizens of all ages ; these however were not pure Greeks, for the old Greek city had been destroyed 152 years before.

The loyalty of the Petelians was recorded by Valerius Maximus who concludes with a striking sentence. "Itaque Annibali non Petelliam, sed fidei Petellinæ sepulchrum capere contigit." (Lib. VI, c. VI).

(So it came to pass that Hannibal did not take Petelia but the grave of Petelian fidelity).

Silius Italicus introduces a legend also noted by Servius

> Fumabat versis incensa Petilia intectis
> Infelix fidei, miseræque secunda Sagunto
> At quondam Herculeam servare superba pharetram.
> (Lib. XII, 431, p. 396, ed. Nisard.)

He notices how once the old city was proud of preserving the quiver of Heracles. Appian (Annib. 29) records that those citizens who escaped were restored by the Romans, and we have seen that Strabo was able to call it well populated.

From inscriptions discovered on the site we learn that the city prospered during the Roman Empire. The modern name of the town on the old site is Strongoli and it is said to contain 7000 inhabitants but it contains no ruins of the old city besides the inscriptions and minor objects of antiquity. Confer Lenormant "La grande Grèce", p. 383 ssq.

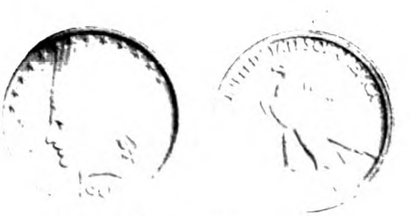
In a document of 1220, he is styled "Reparator Cuneorum". Ruding, under the date 1621, states: "A considerable coinage being about to be executed in the sixth year of Henry III., the following persons were sworn in the court of exchequer, on the morrow of Ash-Wednesday: Ilger, and three others, as custodes monetae of the city of London; Adam Blund, and seven others custodes cuneorum; Michael de St. Helen, reparator cuneorum; and Robert de Grettone, and Geffrey de Frowe, assayers. On the same day eight dies for round halfpennies and farthings, and, in a short time afterwards, eight more for pennies, and eight for halfpennies, and the same number for farthings, over and above the eight first mentioned, were delivered to the same persons".

SAINT-GAUDENS, AUGUSTUS. (Vide GAUDENS. Vol. II, p. 215). This artist was born in Dublin, Ireland, March 1, 1848. His father, Bernard Paul Ernest, was a native of France, coming from the vicinity of the town of Saint-Gaudens, among the spurs of the Pyrenees. His mother, whose maiden name was Mary Guinness, was a native of Dublin. They came to this country while Augustus was an infant, and after remaining three months in Boston established themselves in New York. He attended school until he was thirteen, when he went to work with a cameo-cutter named Avet, and served a three-years apprenticeship, at the end of which time he found employment with a shell-cameo-cutter named Le Breton, with whom he remained for three years. During all the time that he was working at the wheel he studied drawing at night. The first four years he went to the Cooper Union; the last two were spent in the life classes of the National Academy of Design.



U. S. A. 5 Dollar piece, 1907.

At the age of twenty he was already a master of low relief. He then went abroad and was at the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Paris, 1867-70. He married in Boston, 1877, Augusta F. Homer. He was in Rome, 1870-2, producing there, in 1871, his first figure. Among his works are "Diana" (on the tower of Madison Square Garden, New York), and numerous well-known statues in the larger cities of the Union; among the best known of these is the monument in Boston to Colonel Shaw and his regiment of coloured troops, executed in bronze. Some of his most charming work was done in low relief, in the form of medallions of his friends and fellow-artists, and occasionally of prominent men, for public memorials.

He was a corresponding member of the Institute of France; officer of the Legion of Honour; received the medal of honour, Paris, 1900, and a special medal of honour at Buffalo, 1901.

"Augustus Saint Gaudens, a sculptor whose art follows but ennobles nature, confers fame and lasting remembrance, and does not count the mortal years it takes to mould immortal forms."

U. S. A. 20 Dollar piece, 1907.

Thus spoke President Eliot at the commencement of Harvard University in June 1897, when conferring upon the sculptor the degree of Master of Arts; and the years that have gone have not brought a worthier or more fitting tribute, one which now may well serve as an epitaph. He died at Cornish, N. H., Aug. 3, 1908, after an illness extending over several years. Greatest of all American sculptors and surpassed by few if any other sculptor in the world, his life story is a source of pride to every one of us. For he was an American through and through, and his work had America stamped indelibly upon it. ("American Journal of Numismatics, 1907-8".)

While the reputation of this great artist will mainly rest upon his ability and success as a sculptor the numismatist will remember that there was another side to his genius and believes that his small medallions with portraits will some day later even rank higher, also his plaques and busts. Such are his low relief portraits of R. L. Stevenson, the author; President Woolsey of Yale, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder, Schuyler van Rensselaer, and Mrs. C. C. Beaman; his busts of Bishop Phillips Brooks of Boston and William M. Evarts. Unfortunately he has done little for the medallic art, though the Columbus medal, the Franklin and the Washington are in part his design. Among his most noted medallic works are the Plaquette and Medal of the Chicago Exhibition, 1894. In Art et Décoration, 1900, II, 40 is a reproduction of his medal entitled : " Ménage Dean ", and a Portrait-medal of Dr. Asa Gray, Cambridge, Mass. is described in A. J. N. 1745.

St. Gaudens' work of sculpture is considerable and famous. His monuments of Lincoln and Sherman are considerd as the finest pieces of sculpture in the American continent. At the time of his death he was just about exhibiting his statue of Parnell, which is said to be his masterpiece.

The latest U. S. A., gold currency consisting of 20, 10, 5 and 2 ½ Dollar pieces, from St. Gaudens' models, have created a stir in the coin world, for their originality in conception and artistic workmanship. The first 20 Dollar pieces struck were on high relief, but were withdawn from circulation, and the current coins, the low-relief pieces, have the same thickness as the old pieces, i. e. two millimeters But a few thousand of the high relief pieces were struck and intended for collectors and for souvenirs. These high reliefs were struck on a medal press, and each piece was struck ten times and annealed between each impression.

The dies of both pieces were cut at about the same time. There are several minor points of difference between the two pieces, the date, the Capitol at Washington, the legs on the eagle, the sun rays on the Rev. &c.

The high relief pieces represent very closely Saint Gaudens original design while the low relief ones show various modifications.

The high relief pieces will be rare, two days after they were out they brought a substantial premium, and to-day they bring from £ 6 to £ 8. These have been extensively traded on the Curb exchanges of the various cities, but are now gradually getting into collector's hands. The high relief piece is 3 mm. thick, all the pieces weigh the same, 516 grains. The high reliefs are alloyed with silver, while the low reliefs have the regular alloy of copper.

St. Gaudens chose an Irish girl as his model for the head of Liberty. She is Miss Camille Langhorne, of Dublin.

NOTES ON CHARON'S FEE.

In a work published this year by the Cambridge University press " Modern Greek Folklore and Ancient Greek Religion ", by John Cuthbert Lawson M. A., we find an interesting discussion of the ancient and modern practice of placing a coin in the mouth of a dead person. " In parts of Macedonia, Thrace, and Asia Minor the practice prevails, or till recently prevailed, of placing in the mouth or more rarely on the breast of the dead a small coin, which in the environs of Smyrna is actually known as τὸ περατίκι, passage money. "

An old song puts in the mouth of a dead man the following words : " No last rites did they give me, they gave me none, poor soul, not even a farthing (λεφτε) in my mouth for thee (Charos) who awaitest me ".

The interpretation of the custom, as a payment to Charon, is not remembered ; many who knew the custom did not know its meaning. Mr. Lawson asks " was the classical interpretation a true index to the origin of the custom " ? The study of folklore shows a custom may outlive not only the idea in which it originated, but many false ideas afterwards engendered by it, as attempts to explain it.

Lucian (περὶ πένθους, § 10) stated " they put an obol in the dead man's mouth, as boat-fare for the ferryman ", but he may have given, and probably did give, a new idea to a custom much older than the invention of coinage. Mr. Lawson says " once only did I obtain any explanation at all of the use of the coin — it is useful because of the aërial ones ". Now an old coin is often used as a charm against sinister influences, and is used in amulets. May not this old custom have been that of providing a charm against evil spirits ? It was not that the mouth was used as a purse, but because the soul was thought to pass out by the mouth, and evil spirits to enter therein. A common expression for " at the last gasp " is " with the soul between the teeth ".

There is modern evidence of the coin being placed in the mouth of the dead with the intention of providing a protection — in Macedonia a Turkish coin with a verse from the Koran is used as a charm against evil spirits.

Another similar modern custom exists, the placing of a piece of consecrated bread, or a piece of pottery on which is scratched IX NIKA (Jesus Christ conquers) upon the mouth.

There was a pagan belief that the soul might reanimate the body, and to prevent that a charm was needed.

Another charm of unknown antiquity still used is the geometrical figure called by the Pythagoreans πεντάγραμμον ☆.

Mr. Lawson says " If my suggestion as to the origin of the custom is correct, it was only the accident of a coin being commonly used as the prophylactic charm which gave rise to the classical association of the custom with Charon, and once disembarrassed from this association, the popular conception of Charon in antiquity is more easily studied ".

The early Greek poets do not mention Charon in the character of ferryman.

The earliest mention of Charon's boat is in the " Minyad ", an epic poem of doubtful, but not early date, quoted by Pausanias (X, xxviii).

The orthodox presentation of the ferryman is derived from the painted figure of Charon at Delphi by Polygnotus, described by Pausanias. Virgil, in his vivid description of Charon, does not mention the fare or the obol. Æn., VI, 292. Confer Juvenal, Sat. III, 267 where the obol is called a Triens. Euripides and Aristophanes conform to this idea ; and it is common on the funeral vases. The earlier idea of Charon seems to have been that of Death, and he belongs to the old Pelasgian deities. The inscription " Charon " occurs on an Etruscan figure of the god Death. The coin placed in the mouth of the dead was called by a Persian name δανάκη Pollux (IX, 32) says " The Danake some say is a certain Persian coin ".

Suidas (sub voce Δανάκη, p. 508) says :

Danake is the name of a coin which formerly used to be buried with the dead that with it they might pay for the passage over the Acherusian waters. That was a lake in the infernal regions which the dead crossed when they had given the aforesaid coin to the ferryman.

Suidas on p. 245 sub voce καρκαδοντα says: "Thus was named the charge of Charon collected from the obols which used to be buried with the dead. It is not a herb as some wrongly think".

Diodorus Siculus (I, xcvi) is certainly wrong in saying that the custom of placing the obol in the mouth was derived from Egypt. Although the bodies of the Egyptians were covered with charms of all sorts their mouths were always left open and free from charms.

Diodorus after an interesting account of the influence of Egypt on the Greeks says: —

"Other myths of the Greeks are in accordance with what is practised in Egypt at this time — the barque which transports the body, the piece of money, the Obol paid to the boatman named Charon in the language of the country all these practices are found there".

The ancient Egyptians did not use money. The myth of Charon acting as boatman is illustrated in an attic λήκυθος and on a lamp also on a sarcophagus in the villa Albani. We know that imitation money was sometimes used, thin pieces of metal moulded to the form of the coin, and this rather natural custom is in harmony with the words of slighting meaning which were used of these coins.

For instance the word καραταλίς meant a worthless kind of fish but it was also used of the obols buried with the dead.

A play by Pherecrates was called καραταλεύ in which he says these obols were worth a drachma in Hades (Meineke Com. Fr. I, p. 84 seq) so also the word Ψώϊον meaning a little crumb is used of a coin in the above mentioned play; another word equally contemptuous in meaning, and used also by Pherecrates, is κίκκαβος, Hesychius gives two other words ξυνίστρον = νόμισμα and χαλκοκρας = χαλκόκρατος = mixed with copper = a poor bit of copper. They were also called "τροχίσκος" little round things, with the same slighting sense. Further notes are given concerning the finds of such coins in an article in the Memoires de l'Acad. des Inscriptions et B.-lettres, 1838, p. 664 by Raoul Rochette.

NUMISMATIC SOCIETIES, MUSEUMS, &c.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC SOCIETY

May 25. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — The President read copies of letters he had written to their Majesties the King and Queen Mary and to H. M. the Queen-Mother, Royal Members of the Society, expressing the dutiful and profound sympathy of the Society with them in their and the nation's loss by the decease of King Edward VII., the letters being adopted by the members in silence.

Mrs. K. Arthur-Behenna and Mr. Alfred Rider were elected Members.

The President announced that Mr. John Sanford Saltus, of Broadway, New York, a Vice-President of the Society, had presented it with a sum of 200*l.* for the purpose of founding a gold medal to be awarded triennially by ballot of the members to the author of the contribution to the Society's publications which was considered most worthy of recognition. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Saltus for his generous gift, and rules were passed to carry the scheme into effect.

Mr. Bernard Roth read a paper entitled 'The Coins of the Danish Kings of Ireland,' in which he illustrated and described 242 varieties of these interesting silver pennies, which were issued from the close of the tenth century to the beginning of the twelfth. For the purposes of his study he had searched the museums and private collections not only of Great Britain and Ireland, but also of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Denmark, with the result that, for the first time, a thoroughly representative and almost comprehensive series had been classified, and to a great extent chronologically arranged. New types and varieties were thus added to our knowledge and Mr. Roth was enabled to correct many errors of previous writers on the Hiberno-Danish coinage. An interesting feature was that the designs on these coins were for the most part imitated from contemporary issues in England, and by careful comparison the lecturer was enabled to assign them to approximate dates.

Exhibitions: — Mr. Roth and Mr. Carlyon-Britton, several hundred specimens of the Hiberno-Danish coinage; Mr. W. C. Wells, three similar pennies in imitation of types of Æthelred and Canute; Mr. Oswald Fitch, one of the six known specimens of the gold penny of Henry III., being the variety in which the mint-name is spelt LVNDE; Mr. S. M. Spink, a new method of mounting coins and medals in the form of a bound album; Mr. Henry Garside, a series of nickel and aluminium money recently issued in British West Africa, which clearly demonstrated the unsuitability of aluminium for purposes of currency; Mr. Henry Symonds, Archbishop Wareham's penny of the second coinage of Henry VIII. struck at Canterbury with mintmark T, hitherto unrecorded, and a Dorchester token of Thomas Evomy, probably issued about 1698; and Major Freer, Messrs. Spink's memorial medal to King Edward VII.

Presentations: — By the National Battle-fields Commission, the tercentenary medal of the founding of Quebec; by the authors, 'Eighteenth-Century Tokens,' Part I., by S. H. Hamer and R. Dalton.

KING CANUTE'S COINS.

INTERESTING TREASURE TROVE IN GOTHLAND.

The antiquarian treasures recently discovered in Gothland have arrived at Stockholm, and examination by the State Museum authorities shows, says Reuter, that the coins unearthed are of great interest and antiquity. The treasure trove consists of 1.904 whole coins and 85 imperfect coins, a fragment of the border of a clasp, a portion of a buckle, and some plain pieces of silver. The most recent of the coins date back to the middle of the eleventh century, and the oldest are Arabian, of which there are twenty-eight. These are pierced, and appear to have been used as ornaments. Thirty-one imperfect Arabian coins were found, four of which are from Byzantium.

Included in the discovery are 1.115 German coins, and 726 Anglo-Saxon pieces, bearing the effigies of King Ethelred and of King Canute. There are also thirty-five Danish and Norwegian coins. It is interesting to note that more than 80 per cent, of the total discoveries of Anglo-Saxon coins has been made in Gothland. On the western coast, nearest to England, but few English coins have been discovered, which would seem to prove that Gothland was once the commercial centre of Scandinavia.

GREEK COINS.

SICILY.

SYRACUSE.

One of the most renowned cities of antiquity, on the S. E. coast of Sicily, 80 miles S. W. of Messina, occupying a wide triangular tableland and the small island Ortygia. It was founded about 733 B.C. by Corinthian colonists. Amongst its rulers were the tyrants Gelon, Dionysius the Elder, Dionysius the Younger, and Hiero, the patron of Aeschylus, Pindar, etc.

Syracuse successfully resisted the long siege of the Athenians in 414 B.C., and rose to great fame after its struggle with the Carthaginians in 397 B.C., but siding with Hannibal in the Punic Wars, it was taken by the Romans after a two years' siege (212 B.C.) Under Roman rule it slowly declined, and finally was sacked and destroyed by the Saracens in 878 A.D.

VARIA

To compare one form of collecting with another is illogical, yet it is of interest to know that a sale at Sotheby's yesterday hinted that the value of a rare group of military decorations, hereafter to be described, practically coincides with that of an untrimmed first state of Rembrandt's poignant etching of "The Three Trees," or with one of the dedication proofs of Méryon's solemn "L'Abside de Nôtre-Dame". £620 was the sum paid by Messrs. Spink for the late General Sir Frederick Stovin's array of medals and orders in the collection of Mr. Robert Day, of Cork. In his day, Sir Frederick was director of the studies of the Duke of Connaught — as Prince Arthur — and accompanied him to Geneva. The Stovin series comprised (a) gold Peninsular Cross for Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, with two clasps for Orthes and Toulouse; (b) a gold and enamelled badge of the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, (c) Star of the Order, (d) gold and enamelled badge of Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, (e) Star of the Order, and (f) Military General Service medal, three clasps, Corunna Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz.

Not often does one see a reminder of Blake's victory over the Dutch in 1653, only eight of the Commonwealth's decorations for this event being known. On the obverse of the gold medal is an anchor from which three shields are suspended, bearing the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew and the Irish harp. A naval engagement, designed by the medallist Thomas Simon is on the reverse. Yesterday the medal won by Captain Clifton, of "The George," realised £170 (Baldwin). Another single decoration was a field officers's gold medal for the capture of Martinique, with a clasp for the capture of Guadaloupe, awarded to Major Luke Allen, of the 3rd West India Regiment. This brought £90 (Baldwin), the same purchaser giving £72 for a field officer's gold medal for the Battle of Barrosa, 1811, granted to Major Alexander Duncan, of the Royal Artillery, afterwards killed at Seville. Other Peninsular memories were revived by various groups. A series once belonging to General Sir John Macdonald, of the 92nd Highlanders, consisted of a gold and enamelled badge of the Order of the Bath (C.B.), a gold medal for Vittoria, with clasp, and Pyrenees, a Portuguese gold medal for the same, a Portuguese gold cross for six actions, a Spanish gold and enamelled cross for Albuhera, and a general service medal, four clasps, Busaco, Albuhera, Badajoz, and Toulouse, with two letters from the Duke of York, one from Lord Strathnairn, and a Spanish diploma. The auction price of this group was £126 (Spink), £72 being paid by the same for a Sultan's gold medal for Egypt (1801) and a field officer's gold medal for Salamanca, 1812, won by Lieut.-Colonel Robert Fulton, of the 79th Foot — the Cameron Highlanders. Decorations formerly belonging to Lieutenant H. Knoller, R.N., had Portuguese associations with Don John and the hospitality afforded to him by the officers of "The Windsor Castle," a gold badge of that order, set with brilliants, accompanying a naval general service medal, one clasp, St. Sebastian, a gold and enamelled badge of the Order of the Tower and Sword of Portugal, a silver medal of the Order of Fidelity, and a gold medal of the Kinsale Friendly Knot. This series fetched £162 (Baldwin). The capture of Java figured in a group awarded to Colonel Sir James Watson, of the 14th Foot, a field officer's gold medal being with his K.C.B. badge and star, £130 (Spink). As much as £2,629 was obtained in the first day's sale, and it was fitting that the name of Haldane should appear in the collection, £46 being bid for three medals granted to Major-General Charles Haldane, comprising the East India Company's Mysore medal, 1791-2; the Army of India medal, one clasp, Bhurtpoor; and the Indian Mutiny medal, along with a major-general's commission, 1862.

ADVERTISEMENTS

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS

8vo. — 170 pp. — Illustrated. Price : 5/- nett.

"It must not be thought that "Common Greek Coins" is merely a catalogue of ancient Greek money, for it is far more than this. The describing of the coins is utilised to give a cleverly condensed, but most interesting, account of Greek history and mythology, commerce and progress in civilisation. The colonies and conquests of the Hellenes, their foolish feuds and transient friendships all come under survey and comment, and the usually erudite style of Greek numismatists is transformed into a brilliant and most readable essay upon the ancient Greek world. This first volume is provided with a useful index and catalogues of the monograms, initials, symbols, and various mint marks are duly set forth to the various chapters, assisted by numerous engravings of all the more important types."

THE

OF THE

BY W. H. VALENTINE.

This work, which it proposed to issue shortly, is designed to popularise the study of Muhammadan copper coins, and is the outcome of a student's endeavour to identify and arrange them. To this end the author has made faithful drawings of all the specimens of this class of coin that he has been able to find. Commencing with Turkey, the reader is taken numismatically through Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, to Nigeria (for which place the Royal Mint has recently struck a new coinage) and from thence back to East Africa and Arabia. Crossing from there to Europe, the tour continues throught the Crimea, Georgia, Persia, Afghanistan, Bukhara, and terminates in Chinese Turkistan.

Upwards of 900 coins struck during the last three centuries are illustrated, and the Arabic inscriptions carefully transliterated and explained. To assist in the classification of the coins, a geographical arrangement has been adopted, and six coloured maps have been added to enable the reader to locate the various mints.

The interesting field covered by this work has never as yet been dealt with, possibly on account of the great expense involved. It has been suggested that this may be lessened by using the line block process, and printing the major portion in manuscript form. The author hopes that sufficient promises of support will be received to enable the book to be published at a price not exceeding 10/6 a copy, and he trusts that numismatists generally will give the project a hearty support.

N. B. Since the above announcement was prepared orders for over a hundred copies of Mr. Valentine's work have been received by the author and ourselves. It is therefore now confidently hoped that sufficient encouragement may yet be accorded so that the publication of so valuable and unique a work of reference may not be much longer delayed.

It may be mentioned here that it is proposed to strictly limit the edition to 500 copies.

Illustrated specimen-page with Order-form, on application to Spink and Son, Ltd.

I have had an opportunity of seeing what Mr. Valentine's proposed work is like, and I can confidently say that it will be of great use to Numismatists, who are often puzzled in assigning their Eastern Coins to the exact localities to which they belong — especially to such as have not the time or opportunity of studying the languages so essential to their elucidation.

Every coin named is fully illustrated and explained : and from one such, very often several others can be successfully allocated.

Its value will be appreciated the more as its pages are consulted.

THE ANCIENT COINS OF SICILY.

INTRODUCTION.

Few objects are so suggestive of varied interests as an ancient coin; the artist, the historian, the student of Greek Cults all find therein a source of pleasure for both eye and mind. The appeal made by a beautiful coin, and the response thereto, differ in every man, and therefore no one can express for another all that may be gathered of the many interests involved.

A true appreciation of any object of beauty cannot be borrowed, it must be made by personal study and insight. Yet something may be done to help the student to see what is sometimes hidden in rare books or in the cloak of a forgotten language.

Some of the Greek Sicilian coins are among the most beautiful products of Greek Art, and yet no poet has sung their praises as Addison did those of the Imperial Roman coins, and the only writers who have described them are the expert numismatists writing for scholars.

No one has attempted the humbler task of placing within the reach of the many such a work as may encourage the study of one of the most interesting and beautiful of all the series of ancient coins. Two excellent works on the subject are well known. "The coins of ancient Sicily" by G. F. Hill, and "Syracusan Medallions" by Dr A. J. Evans; besides these, several articles are to be found scattered through the pages of various Numismatic Journals. These works however deal with special periods, or with selected coins of historic or artistic interest, and no work upon the Sicilian coins has yet appeared of the nature of a handbook for beginners.

The study of the Greek coinage is commonly pursued in the few hours of leisure found by busy men, and therefore any book which does not involve the frequent search for passages referred to in notes will be welcomed. In the following pages it is proposed to give all the references to ancient authors in full, and in an English translation, because such passages are of interest to the numismatist for the information they give rather than for the language in which they are written.

Some of the works which throw light on the coin-types, such as those of Diodorus Siculus, Tzetzes, Strabo and Pindar, are not commonly found in private libraries. It is with the hope of saving the time of those who desire to study the coins of Sicily as a pleasant recreation that the following work has been undertaken.

A general view of the history is given in the work on "Sicily" by Ed. E. Freeman (in the Story of the Nations Series), and in the "Geschichte Siciliens im Alterthum" von Adolf Holm, and in the work "Historia della Sicilia" by E. Pais (Turin, 1894).

Some readers of the "Coins of Magna Graecia" have expressed a desire to see a similar work on the Coins of Sicily.

Instead of treating the coins of each city from the institution of the mint to its final overthrow, the coins of all the cities belonging to the period before 480 B.C. will be severally treated before going on to those of the succeeding periods. By dividing the work thus into Periods it will be more easy to see the witness of the coins to the influence of each city upon its neighbours.

Sicily, on account of its position in the midst of the Mediterranean, was the meeting place and battle-field of the representative nations of the East and West. There the Eastern Phoenicians settled small trading stations along the coasts, and later the Greeks came to settle more permanent homes in colonies which ultimately implanted Western civilization in the island.

The earlier inhabitants, the Sicels and Sicanians, were unable to influence the struggle between the two greater powers to any serious extent.

The period, in which this struggle between East and West for the island took place, was that between the eighth and the sixth centuries before Christ: about that time the Dorian and Ionian Greeks went forth to colonize the shores of Asia Minor in the east, and of Italy and Sicily in the west. As Sicily was situated to the west of Italy it was natural for the earlier emigrants to colonize the east shores of Sicily within sight of the Italian mountains.

The West side of the island long remained in possession of the eastern people, the Phoenicians, whose base was then the shore of Africa, and their headquarters Carthage.

The coinage of these Greek Colonies owes its great interest to the importance of the struggle in which they were involved with the eastern race, and to the witness of the coinage to the gradual rise and to the wonderful perfection of Art among the Greeks, who, of all the races of mankind, were most gifted with the power of producing beauty of form and language.

The following poem by J. H. Newman expresses well the apology which some may deem due for the study of men who were so often cruel, and whose art was devoted to religious ideas long outgrown.

"Homo sum: humani nil a me alienum puto."

Why, wedded to the Lord, still yearns my heart
Towards these scenes of ancient heathen fame?
Yet legend hoar, and voice of bard that came Fixing my restless youth with its sweet art,
And shades of power, and those who bore a part
In the mad deeds that set the world in flame,
So fret my memory here, — ah! is it blame? —
That from my eyes the tear is fain to start,
Nay, from no fount impure these drops arise
Tis but that sympathy with Adam's race
Which in each brother's history reads its own,
So let the cliffs and seas of this fair place
Be named man's tomb and splendid record stone
High hope, pride stained, the course without the prize.

Feb. 1833.

The Greek cities of Sicily in which mints were established during the period before 480 B.C. are seven in number, Camarina, Dankle, Gela, Himera, Naxos, Selinus and Syracuse. At the same time five Barbarian cities issued their earliest coinage, Eryx, Galeria, Morgantina, Segesta and Ergetium.

The Ionians established mints at Naxos, Dankle, and Himera, the Dorians at Syracuse, Camarina and Gela, and the Megarians at Selinus. Of the four barbarian cities, Eryx was an old Phoenician town, Galeria, Ergetium, and Morgantina were ancient Sikel towns, while Segesta belonged to the Elymi.

The date 480 B.C. is chosen for the end of this first period of the coinage partly because up to that date the style of the coins is archaic in character, and partly because that year was so eventful in the great struggle between the East and the West. In that year Xerxes and his Persians were defeated at Salamis, and the Carthaginian host at Himera by Gelo and Theron. The connection between the attacks by Persians and Carthaginians at the same moment is obscure but is generally acknowledged.

In the eighth century monarchic government began to give place to the aristocratic, and the change caused many to turn their attention to colonization. The new rulers induced many of the less privileged citizens to emigrate, and many of the discontented nobles gladly put themselves at the head of bands of emigrants.

The first of the colonists to settle in Sicily came from Chalcis in the isle of Euboea, where the government of the aristocratic party, called the Hippobotae, were in power. These Chalcidians were accompanied by a party of emigrants from the island Naxos, which was then governed by an oligarchy. The Naxian Tyrant Lugdamis did not rise to power until long afterwards, in 540 B.C.

The rise of the Tyrants and the fall of the oligarchies took place during the last half of the seventh century before Christ. The first Tyrant whose name has come down to us was Panaetius of Leontini who assumed his rule in 600 B.C.

The next was the far more famous Phalaris of Akragas, who ruled from 570 to 554 B.C. A reference to the coinage of his time occurs in the accusation made against him, that he used money of the city entrusted to him, for the payment of his mercenaries. Money is also mentioned as in common use at this early period in a law of Charondas who gave laws to Zancle and Naxos. It enacted that all buying and selling should be transacted with ready money.

Some of the Tyrants were popular leaders against the oligarchs to whom the people had furnished a guard.

Some of them were magistrates, or generals, who turned their lawful powers to the unlawful object of attaining the old powers of a king.

All tyrants were not bad men; some used their power oppres-

sively, some were selfish and cruel, but the Greek cities attained great prosperity under the rule of others.

They all seem to have desired to leave their power to their sons, but the sons seldom knew how to keep what their fathers gained. Tyrants were more common in these Sicilian Greek colonies than in the mother land. Our numismatic interest in them consists in the fact that most of the early coins of this first period were issued under their rule.

THE TYRANTS.

A few extracts from Aristotle's work " πσλιτιχων " will help us to realize what the ancients thought of the tyrants whose coins we are about to study and probably will cause some to read the whole work with renewed interest.

(III 8). A tyranny is a monarchy where one person has a despotic power over the whole community ".

(III 17). " A tyranny is not according to nature ".

(IV 10). " Monarchs with absolute power, and formerly among the Greeks were some such, whom they called Æsumnetes (αἰσυμνήτας), they were tyrannical because they ruled despotically according to their own will " ; " this monarchy must needs be a tyranny where one rules over his equals and superiors without being accountable for his conduct, and whose object is his own advantage, and not the advantage of those he governs".

(V 10). " A tyranny is formed from the worst kinds of oligarchy and democracy, and retains all the corruptions and defects of both these states ".

" The generality of tyrants were indeed mere demagogues who gained credit with the people by inveighing againt the nobles. Some tyrannies were established in this manner when the cities were considerably enlarged ; others before that time by kings who exceeded their hereditary power from a desire of governing despotically ; while others were founded by those elected to the higher offices of state ; (for formerly the people appointed officers for life to be at the head of civil and religious affairs), and some were founded by the oligarchs, who chose one out of their body with the supreme power over the highest magistrates. By all these means it was easy to found a tyranny, if they chose it ; for their power was ready at hand, because they were either kings or else in possession of the honours of the state. Then Pheidon at Argos, and others became tyrants, having enjoyed originally the kingly power ; while Phalaris, and others in Ionia, from holding state honours. Panaetius at Leontium, Cypselus at Corinth, Pisistratus at Athens, Dionysius at Syracuse and others, acquired their tyrannies by having been demagogues.

A Tyrant is ambitious of amassing wealth, but a King rather of honour. The guards too of a King are citizens, but those of a Tyrant are foreigners. That a tyranny contains what ever is bad both in a democracy and an oligarchy is evident "....

" Those who have raised themselves to the supreme power have generally preserved it, still those who have received it from them, to speak the truth, almost immediately all lose it, for by falling into an effeminate way of life, they soon grow despicable, and offer many opportunities to conspirators. The tyrants endeavour to know what every individual chooses to do or say and for this purpose employ spies ; such were those women whom the Syracusans call ποταγωγίδες (from the Doric πόττι for πρὸς and ἄγω). Hiero also used to send out listeners whenever there was any meeting or conversation ". Aristotle then shews how tyrants caused poverty and war, favoured flatterers, and were unfavourable to strangers.

Mints were not established in Sicily much before 520 B.C. and therefore the money referred to in the various accounts of Phalaris and Charondas, must have been money brought from the mother cities. It is doubtful whether the earliest Greek coins, those of Ægina had been struck, when Naxos the first Colony was established, so that for the first 100 years, the only coins likely to have been in circulation, were the tortoises of Ægina. Soon after 590 B.C. some Corinthian coins may have been used, but the well known Pegasi, with the swastika on the Reverse, did not become common till after 580 B.C. Another generation arose before the Athenian tetradrachms, of globular form and archaic owl types, began to come into circulation.

Specimens of all these coins are found in Sicily in quantities sufficient to shew they were in common use.

The trade with the Sicels or Sicanians would be carried on in the first two centuries of the colonization with the litrae of bronze, and with the old bars or pieces of metal, the use of which was widely known.

The native Sicel standard of weight had a certain influence afterwards, for when the Sicels imitated the Colonists in coining silver litræ, the fact that this coin was one-twentieth of the Euboic Attic tetradrachm of 270 grains, caused the Sicilian Greek cities to give up the Æginetic Standard for the Euboic Attic, as more convenient to their trade with the Sicels. Thus a Euboic drachm was equal to five Sicel litræ, and the didrachm to ten litræ.

The earliest Standard of weight among the Greek Colonists was naturally that called the Aeginetic which was in use at Cumæ and Rhegium.

The drachm of this standard weighed about 90 grains. Three of these Æginetic drachms were equivalent to one Euboic Attic tetradrachm of 270 grains, while each Æginetan drachm contained about eight obols of the Euboic-Attic standard. It was therefore quite possible for the two systems of weight to be used together for some time.

In the Æginetic system the gold stater weighed 130 grains and the silver coins were so arranged that ten pieces of silver should pass for the gold coin. Gold and silver were valued as 15 : 1.

One gold Talanton of 130 grs × 15 = 1950 grs Æ.

1950 grs Æ ÷ 10 = 195 grs Æ.

The drachm should have been 97 grains but generally it is found to be about 90 grs.

Dr Imhoof-Blumer regards these Æginetic drachms as thirds of the Euboic Attic tetradrachms 17.4 grammes 269 grains (90 grs × 3 = 270 grains).

If this were so then these drachms are octobols and the division of the silver stater into thirds would be derived from the Corinthian standard. The Euboic Attic Standard was adopted at the end of this first period of the Sicilian coinage.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF MEDALLISTS

B.C. 500 — A.D. 1900.

(Including the names of several hitherto unpublished artists.)

SAINT-URBAIN, FERDINAND DE (French). One of the best known Medallists of the end of the seventeenth and first four decades of the eighteenth century; was born at Nancy on 30. June 1658, as the son of Claude Augustin Urbain, Goldsmith and Engraver, and Anne Lenoir. He studied drawing and painting, without apparent success at first. On the invasion of Lorraine by the foreign armies, he left his native country and for a time resided with an uncle at Munich. He then travelled through Germany and Italy, and began to practise the art of die-engraving, in which, although without a teacher, he made rapid progress, and soon obtained official recognition.

Portrait-medal of St. Urbain, by his son.

In 1673 he was appointed Mint-engraver at Bologna, and ten years later went to Rome, where Innocent XI. placed him at the head of the Papal coinage with the title of Chief-engraver and Architect. After a stay of over thirty years in Italy, he returned to Nancy, became attaché to the Mint there in 1704, in succession to Hardy, with a stipend of 1500 livres, and was appointed Engraver on 1. January 1707. In 1703 he prepared the plans for the construction of the primatical church of Nancy. He married at Rome Elisabeth Dominique Mantenois, by whom he had two daughters, and died on 10. January 1738. After his return to his native place St. Urbain is said to have executed over 120 medals, which include a series of the Dukes and Duchesses of Lorraine, and an unfinished one of the Popes. These medals are usually signed : S. V.

As a Coin-engraver, St. Urbain's activity began at Bologna, where between 1673 and 1683 he executed most of the coin-dies, comprizing the series issued under the Mint-master Giovanni Carlo Gualcheri. In 1696, he was again appointed for a term of three years as Mint-engraver at Bologna, but was replaced in December 1697 by a French die-sinker, Thomas Bajard. Malaguzzi Valeri gives a list of the coins issued at Bologna during that period.

From 1683 to 1703 the artist worked almost exclusively for Popes Clement X., Innocent XI., Alexander VIII., Innocent XII., and Clement XI., some of whose coins bear his signature : F.D.S.V., or S. V., and also S. VRBA. OP., S. VR., FERD. DE S. V., etc. Among these I have noticed : Innocent XII., A. Doppia of An. VI; ℞. Noah's ark ; *A*R. Scudi of An. V. ; The Pope presiding at a Consistorium ; An VI (obv. only ; illustrated), and others, of Anni V and VI, with ℞. PACEM LOQVETVR GENTIBVS, signed : FERD. DE S. V. ; An VIII., signed on obv. S. VRBA OP. and ℞. S.V.OP. St. Peter blessing the people ; Mezzi Scudi of years V (2), VI (3), VII (3), IX (2), etc. Clement XI., A. of same type ; Bolognese Double Giulio, undated ; signed : S. V., etc. A number of other coins by St. Urbain are described by Beaupré (pp. 167-172) and Mory d'Elvange.

St. Urbain engraved most of the dies for the coinage of Duke Leopold of Lorraine, but only signed one, the Leopold d'argent of 1710. Mory d'Elvange states that all the coins struck at Nancy between 1703 and 1736 were engraved from designs or under the direction of St. Urbain. Among the most noteworthy are the Grands Leopolds of 1704 and 1705, the Testons of 1704, of two different dies, 1703, 1709 and 1711, Half Testons, 1706, Half Leopold d'argent, 1727, and subsidiary coins; also gold Leopolds of 1710, 1716-1719, 1722, 1724-1725 ; silver Ecus and subdivisions of 1716-1722, etc. The d'Aubonnes (coins issued by Regard d'Aubonne, to whom Duke Leopold conceded the right of coinage in 1724) of the years 1724 and 1725 are of very fine work. The Ducat d'or of Francis III., 1736, and Ecu d'argent of the same year are usually attributed to Augustin St. Urbain, who may have executed them after his father's drawings.

Leopold d'argent, 1710.

The list of a medallic works by Ferdinand de St. Urbain I have been able to reconstitute fairly fully, from Lepage's indications.

From a memoir just published by Dr Eug. Demôle in Revue suisse de Numismatique, t. XVI, 1910, entitled : « Les jetons représentant les Métamorphoses d'Ovide sont-ils l'œuvre de Jérôme Roussel, de Jean Dassier ou de Ferdinand de St. Urbain? " it results " that Jérôme Roussel as the author of this series of 50 jetons, which he caused to be struck at Geneva. The dies remained in that city, and may have been acquired by Jean Dassier. In 1717 and 1720 Barthélemy Favre and Jean Dassier formed an association in which Dassier was employed as Engraver. The latter cut three fresh dies, one of which he dedicated to the Duke of Orleans (it is signed : I. DASSIER F.), these to take the place of the three dedication pieces by Jerome Roussel. It is extremely probable that Favre and Dassier used the three fresh dies with the forty-seven dies with subjects of Roussel. In 1729 Barthélemy Favre, who was then residing in Paris, had the dies sent to him, and soon after Saint-Urbain became the owner. The latter Medallist obtained permission from the Duke of Lorraine to use them, but Dr Demole has come to the conclusion that so far nothing proves that he ever had any struck. "

I shall howeer summarily describe them :

Beside these there is an unfinished die of 'Semele consumed by the darts of Jupiter'. The Paris Mint possesses a series of 18 unfinished dies with subjects from Ovid's Metamorphoses, probably by Roussel.

Francis III., Duke of Lorraine.

Beside the above works, Beaupré mentions a number of models in wax by the artist, some of which were evidently made for medals; also seals, and copper engravings.

St.-Urbain was a member of most of the Italian Academies and of many other European ones, and he had been decorated by Clement XII. with the Order of Christ.

Hedlinger (Vide Vol. II, 356) worked for some time under St.-Urbain at Nancy, 1716.

A street at Nancy is named after the artist.

Mory d'Elvange, in commenting on St. Urbain's medallic work says: "Un correct recherché dans le dessin, une précision flatteuse dans l'exécution, une fertilité, une variété charmante dans les détails, une expression pathétique dans les caractères. Le ton de vie, l'âme dans les figures, la légèreté, l'élégance dans les draperies, la netteté dans le burin, cette aisance, ce fini gracieux, qui séduisent l'œil avide de l'amateur. Tels sont les caractères distinctifs de la plus grande partie des têtes, mais surtout des revers des médailles de St.-Urbain."

SAINT-URBAIN, MARIE ANNE DE (French). Daughter of Ferdinand de St.-Urbain, and brother of Claude Augustin, was born at Nancy on 3. January 1711. She became also a Medallist of note, and followed, in company of her brother, Duke Francis III. of Lorraine to Vienna, where she died at an advanced age. She married Charles Benoît Vaultrin, king's counseller in the bailliwick of Château-Salins.

From a pamphlet entitled: "Recueil des ouvrages gravés en coins de médailles et modelés en cire par Mme Vaultrin, née de Saint-Urbain, pensionnaire de feu Sa Majesté Impériale François I." I extract the following list of this lady-artist's works, which range between 1742 and 1780, and are usually signed M. S. V.: Medal of Stanislaus I, King of Poland, struck on the Inauguration of a statue erected to Louis XV on the Place royale at Nancy, 1755 (struck in gold, silver, and bronze, at Nancy); — Francis I. and Maria Theresia, 1758; — Princess Anne Charlotte of Lorraine, 1742; — Cardinal de Choiseul, primate of Lorraine; — Marie-Elizabeth of Parma, first consort of the emperor Joseph I, 1762; — The Military Academy at Wiener-Neustadt; — Maria Theresia, 1780.

Marie Anne de St.-Urbain was especially noted as a Modeller in wax. By her are the followings wax medallions intended as reverses for medals commemorating the King of Poland's fifteen endowments: Mission royale, 1742; — Frères de Saint-Jean-de-Dieu, 1750; — Frères des écoles chrétiennes; — Fondation des pauvres orphelins de l'un et l'autre sexe à l'hôpital Saint-Julien de Nancy; — Fondation pour les pauvres honteux; — Établissement des Cadets-gentilshommes; — Pensionnaires aux dames du Saint-Sacrement de Nancy; — Etablissement des magasins de blé; — Bourse des marchands; — Fondation pour les incendies; — Etablissement de l'Architecture; — Construction de la place d'Alliance de Nancy; — Etablissement de la Bibliothèque publique et des prix de l'Académie; — Etablissement de l'Académie royale, 1750; — Fondation de la Chambre royale des consultations. SALMSON, JEAN JULES (French), Son of Jean Baptiste S., and born at Paris in 1822, died at Coupvray (Seine-et-Marne) in 1902. He is known chiefly as a Sculptor, and studied under Rancy, Dumont, and A. Toussaint. In 1867 he was created a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

For many years he was Director of the School of Industrial Arts at Geneva.

At the Salon of 1869 this artist exhibited six Portrait-medallions, and a medal in bronze of the Société libre d'émulation du commerce et de l'industrie at Rouen. He also designed the following medals Portrait of Horace Bénédict de Saussure, 1887; engraved by J. Trotin ; — 3e Grand Concours Musical at Geneva, 1890; engraved by Ch. Richard.

Amongst his best known works of sculpture are : 1870. Phryne before the Areopagus; — Laïs and Demosthenes; — 1876. Henry IV. statue intended for the Town Hall of La Rochette ; — Haendel ; La Dévideuse (Luxemburg Museum); — La Gloire (Louvre) ; — Jugement de Paris, etc.

SALNEUVE (French). Maker of coin-presses, etc., residing at Paris in the early part of the nineteenth century. He invented a special process for striking coins in a plain collar. Two Dutch patterns of Louis Napoleon, 1808, struck as trial pieces of the presses made in Paris for the Mint at Utrecht bear in the field of the obv. PIÈCE D'ESSAI | FRAPPÉE | EN VIROLLE PLEINE | PAR LE PROCÉDÉ | DE | SALNEUVE. They are reproduced on Pl. VII and VIII (nos 51 and 52) of Nahuys, Histoire numismatique du Royaume de Hollande, 1858.

SALOMONE, LORENZO (Ital.). Superintendent of the Mint at Cattaro, 1542-1544. His initials L. S. occur on the coins.

SALOMONE, VETTORE (Ital.). Superintendent of the Mint at Venice, 1538. His initials V. S. occur on the coins.

SALOMONE, ZACCARIA (Ital.). Superintendent of the Mint at Cattaro, 1569-1570, His initials Q. S. occur on the coins.

SALOP, WILLIAM OF (Brit.). Keeper of the dies and Mint-warden at Calais appointed under Edward III., 6 February 1348. At this time, says Serrure, silver currency was already being struck at Calais, in imitation of English types.

SALPION. The signature, or owner's name, ΣΑΛΠΙΩΝ occurs on a brilliant golden sard, in the T. W. Greene Collection. It represents a male and female figure engaged in conversation. This gem was exhibited at the Burlington Fine Arts Club Exhibition of Greek Art, 1904, and described in the Catalogue as "a hellenistic gem, apparently contemporaneous".

SALWART, SAMUEL VON FALKENBERG (Bohem.). Mint-master at Prague, appointed in the early part of 1609, but in office for only just over a year, being succeeded on 10. May 1610 by Benedikt Huebmer von Sonnleithen. His privy-mark was an open eagle's wing, which occurs on Ducats, Thalers, and Quarter Thalers of Rudolph II., 1610. There is a Counter with his arms on obv. (Doneb. 3727).

SALVESTRO DELL'AVACCHIA (Ital.). A Florentine Goldsmith (1449-† 1527), who chiefly worked at Rome for Pope Leo X. Vasari tells us that this artist excelled in all details of his work.

Milanesi has suggested the attribution to this goldsmith of Portrait-medals, signed S. D. A., of Cardinal Sclafenati (diam. : 58 mill.), and Filippo Sclafenati (diam. : 54). Vide S. D. A. infra.

Bolzenthal mentions a Master Salvestro, who was residing at Rome, circ. 1530, and very clever in mosaic work. The medallist Pietro Paolo Galeotti is said to have learned this branch of art under him, and possibly, also received instruction in medal-engraving from him.

SALVIUS, ANTON (Ital.). This signature occurs on a cornelian in the Berlin Museum, representing Neptune with his trident in the left hand. This gem was copied by Tassie, and is described in Raspe's Catalogue, n° 2548.

SALWIRCK (also SALWIRCH, or SALVIRCH), JOSEPH (GIUSEPPE) (Swed.). Coin-engraver, and Medallist, born at Langen-Argen in Sweden, 1759; entered the Milanese Mint as apprentice on 29. April 1782, became Third Engraver on 14. March 1789, First Engraver on 30. March 1801, and Chief-Engraver on 4. June 1808. From 1798, he worked there in collaboration with Luigi Manfredini, and from 1808 to 1819, another of his fellow Engravers was Gerolamo Vassallo. According to official documents, Salwirck was only appointed Chief-engraver on 17. July 1819, after the death of Vassalo. He died himself in the following year, 11. December 1820, at the age of sixty-one.

This artist displayed uncommon talent, and his coin-, and medal-dies certainly rank among the best of the period.

Unfortunately most of Salvirck's coin-dies are unsigned, and on the absence of official records, it is impossible to draw up a full list of his productions. I shall therefore limit myself to his best known and chief works : Venetian 10 Lire piece, 1797 ; — Scudo of 6 Lire, 1800, of the Cisalpine Republic (signed : SALVIRCH, illustrated) ; — Trenta Soldi, anno IX. (unsigned); — Patterns for coins of the Italian Republic (1802-1805), none signed (described in Gnecchi, Le Monete di Milano, pp. 203-207); — Milanese coins of Napoleon I., undated Patterns; — Reverses of Patterns for 1806 and 1807, 20 and 10 Lire gold, 5, 2, 1 Lire and 15, 10 and 5 Soldi silver, all bearing the monogram SG in the field; the obverses for all these are by Luigi Manfredini, whose signature LM in monogram occurs to the right of the date under Napoleon's head. The actual currency, 1808-1814, was struck from these 1807 types, and we may therefore conclude that all the reverse dies for Napoleon's Italian coinage were engraved by Salwirck (issued at the mints of Milan, Bologna, and Venice); — Francis II. of Austria, Venetian Zecchino (dies preserved at the Vienna Mint); — Seals of the Italian Republic.

Among Salwirck's medals I may mention: 1796. Bonaparte crossing over the Pô, Adda, and Mincio, 30. May 1796 (signed: I. S. F. ; the dies of this medal were engraved direct into the steel by the artist) ; — 1797. Reverse of the Medal commemorating the Fête of the Confederation of the Cisalpine Republic, 9. July 1797 ; obv. ALL' ITALICO. Bust of General Bonaparte, by Vassallo ; ℞. L'INSUBRIA LIBERA. SAMBON, CAV. JULES (French). Fine Art Dealer, Archeologist and Numismatist, formerly residing in Milan, now in Paris. He edited some medals, amongst which I have noted one commemorating the Inauguration of a Monument to Garibaldi, at Vercelli, 1. June 1890. It was executed at Milan by the Engraver Donzelli, and bears on obv. the publisher's name: G. SAMBON ED.

SAMBSTAG, GEORG (Germ.). Mint-master at Kulmbach, Bavaria, 1622.

SAMPAIO, ELEUTRIO RIBEIRO (Brazil.). Engraver at the Mint of Rio-de-Janeiro, circ. 1861. His initials E.R.S. occur on the Rv. of a Prize Medal of that date, the obv. of which was cut by Lüster.

SAMSON, JOHANN ULRICH (Swiss). Line-engraver and Medallist of the second half of the eighteenth century, born in 1729, died in 1796. He began as a Line-engraver, but later on studied medal-engraving at Geneva, inspiring himself from the works by Dassier and Hedlinger. To improve himself in the art, he undertook a journey to Italy, and on his return settled in business as a Die-sinker at Basle. Hedlinger favoured him with his advice and is said to have been favourably impressed by his achievements, especially by Samson's self portrait-medal. In 1781 Samson was City-councillor at Basle.

Among this artist's works we find: Undated Scholastic Prize Medal of Basle (1779), signed S; — Portrait-medals of Johannes Bernouilli, the famous mathematician of Basle, 1710-† 1790, 1767 (2 var.; signed: SAMSON); — Johann Jakob Spreng, of Basle, poet and scholar, 1699-† 1768, 1767; — Johann Rudolf Weltstein, a Basle statesman, and Swiss plenipotentiary at the Conference which led to the Peace of Westphalia, 1648, 1770 (signed: SAMSON. 1770); — The artist's self Portrait (mentioned by Bolzenthal); — J. A. Justiniani, praefect of Bergamo, 1782, etc.

SAMPSON H. G. (Amer.). A dealer in coins and medals, for many years located at the corner of Broadway and Fulton streets N.Y. City. In 1876 he issued a large token (in copper, brass, and white-metal) with head of Washington on one side and his business address &c. on reverse.

(See former reference of the "Numismatist" (about 1899) where Dr. Wright has described his tokens as no. 933 in his series of American Store and Business Cards.

SAMUEL (Austr.). Founder, and Die cutter, who worked for the Mint at Budweis, circ. 1589-1595. He is styled "Samuel the goldsmith" on a document of 1595. Various payments are recorded against him for casting gold medals.

SAMUEL, CHARLES (Belg.). Contemporary Sculptor, residing at Brussels, where he was born on 29. December 1862. He is a pupil of the Academy of that city, under Simonis, Jacquet, and Charles Van der Stappen. He also worked under the medallist Charles Wiener. He has been awarded a Silver medal at Paris, 1889, Gold medals at the Exhibitions of Antwerp, 1894, Dresden, 1897, Brussels, 1897, Paris, 1900, Munich, 1901, and Saint-Louis, 1904. He is a Knight of the Order of Leopold, and of the Crown of Congo.

This artist's medallic productions are few so far, but they are characterised, says M. de Witte, by the distinguished and sober style which is so well-adapted to the medal. Among these are: Commemorative Plaquette of the Inauguration of the Hôtel de Ville of St Gilles, 1904; — Twentieth Anniversary of the Foundation of the Independent Congo State; — Seventy-fifth Anniversary of Belgian Independence, 1830-1905; diam.: 70 mill. (only a few specimens of this medal were struck and distributed by King Leopold himself); — Portrait of M. Aug. Vergote; — Exhibition of Culinary Arts; — Portrait-plaquette of M. Charles Dietrich; — Medal of the Chambre syndicale de l'Automobile of Belgium, 1908; — Medal of the "Couvent des sup.·. cons.·. du 33e degré du rite Scoss in am.·.et acc.·."; — Portrait plaquette of Ch. Graux, 1908; — Portrait-medal of Comte Goblet d'Alviella, 1908; — Memorial Plaquette of Baron F. A. Gevaert (Studio XXXIX, 140).

M. Samuel is a pupil of the French school. Some of his productions are of charming taste.

SANDREUTER, HANS (Swiss). Painter born at Basle in 1850, died at Riehen in 1901. He excelled as a landscape painter. Among his chief productions, I may just mention: — The Valley of Bavona; — The outskirts of Basle; — The Fountain of Jouvence; — Il Decamerone. At the Paris Salon, 1901, he exhibited. — The Rhine at Basle, and The Rhine at Schaffhausen.

This artist designed the Portrait-medal of the famous painter, Arnold Boecklin of Basle, 1897 (struck by Huguenin frères, Le Locle).

SANGALLO, FRANCESCO DA (Ital.). Sculptor, Architect, and Medallist (1494-1576), son of Giuliano Giamberti da Sangallo, a famous Architect and Sculptor, and founder of the dynasty of artists of his name. Francesco was born on 1. March 1494, and spent the first ten years of his life at Florence. His father being appointed in 1504 Architect to the Vatican and St. Peter's by his old friend and protector, the Cardinal delle Rovere, who had ascended the pontifical throne under the name of Julius II., 1503, the family definitely settled at Rome in 1506.

In that same year young Francesco accompanied his father and Michel Angelo to view the remains of the famous antique group of the Laocoon, which had just been discovered in the ruins of the Thermae of Titus, and we learn that he drew the group to the satisfaction of his father. Like all the young artists of that time, Francesco studied painting, and became a pupil of Piero di Cosimo, whose portrait he is said to have painted. Andrea del Sarto, his intimate friend, greatly encouraged him to follow his inclination, but the artist soon turned to sculpture, in which art he was instructed by Andrea Contucci del Monte Sansovino, better known as Andrea Sansovino.

"The sculptures of Francesco", remarks von Fabriczy, "show nothing of the reserved conception, of the refined feeling of those of his father, who in the tombs of the Sassetti in S. Trinita has bequeathed to us two marble medallions of the giver of the commission, which in delicacy of execution might compete with medals". This artist is the author of the statue of Bonafedo, bishop of Cortona; of a group of the Virgin and Child with St. Anne at

Or San Michele; and of the monuments of the bishop Angelo Marzi and Piero II. de' Medici at Monte Cassino. One of his best works is the statue of Paul Jove, bishop of Nocera, in the cloister of San-Lorenzo. In 1530 he was employed in the fortifications of Florence.

The medals which are signed by him and the others which are ascribed to him offer quite distinct characteristics to those of his predecessors and contemporaries. " He is faithful ", again remarks

Francesco da Sangallo died at Florence on 17. February 1576. His wife Elena di Cristofano Marsuppini, whose portrait-medallion he made in 1551, gave him no heir, but he left a natural son, Clement, who died in 1586.

The following medals bear the artist's signature: 1. Paolo Giovio (1483-†1552), 1552, signed : FRANC. SANGALLIVS FACIEB ; diam : 95 mill. (illustrated); — 2. Giovanni de Medici, delle Bandenere (1498-†1526), 1522, signed : FRANC. SANGALLIVS FACIE. ; diam. : 93 mill. (illustrated); — 3. For it was this Epicurean on the Chair of Peter who evoked at his court the Golden Age for poets, literati, lute-players, and buffoons". (Italian Medals, p. 143). See Armand's notes on these two medals, t. III, p. 62.

Beside these medals, Gustave Clausse (Les San Gallo, t. III) adds another of Niccolo Martelli, a Florentine poet, 1544 (in the Bargello, at Florence), signed : FRACESCO SANTO GALLO AMICO SVO CARO FACIE. The portrait is reproduced on p. 228 of the above work. The medal is uniface, and measures 94 mill. in diameter. Supino also describes this piece, and a Portrait-medallion, uniface, of a Lady, 119 mill., cast in bronze, and gilt. And Dr Bode ascribes to the same artist a Portrait-medallion of Pope Clement VII. (Simon Collection). Of the medallist, the learned German savant says : "Sehr leicht kenntlich ist Francesco da San Gallo, dessen derbe, klobige Portrtäts in hohem Relief einer gewissen Kraft und Lebenswahrheit nicht entbehren ".

in alto rilievo cosi esagerato da far loro perdere il carattere proprio a tal genere di produzioni ".

Among the later medalists Francesco da Sangallo was almost alone in carrying on into the mid-sixteenth century the research for characteristic form which distinguished the work of the Quattrocento. The contrast between Sangallo's work and that of Benvenuto Cellini shows how rapid was the decline of the art after the first quarter of the Cinquecento. How little the characteristic has to do with likeness in the modern photographic sense may be seen by looking at the medals of Pastorino, almost the only Italian medalist who would be likely to have a fashionable success to-day. His are indeed speaking likenesses, but they are remarkable rather

CHINESE CURRENCY REFORM

Shangai, May 28.

On May 24 a remarkably minute and explicit Imperial decree was published dealing with that ancient grievance, the confusion of China's currency and the remedial measures which on the recommendation of the Ministry of Finance are to be adopted. The following paragraph, translated from the decree, gives the gist of the proposals :

It is commanded that the unit of national currency shall be the "yuan", or dollar, and the standard shall temporarily be silver. The dollar shall be the principal currency and shall weigh seven mace and two candareens. The subsidiary coinage shall be three silver coins of 50, 25, and 10 cents denominations; one nickel coin of five cents and four copper coins of two cents, one cent, five cash, and one cash. The values of the dollars, ten cents, cents, and cash shall be in decimal proportion and permanently fixed. It shall not be permitted to raise their relative values nor to depreciate them. The Ministry shall direct the mints to mint new coins according to the standard weight, purity, and design, and to issue them gradually for currency.

In order to avoid loss the old coinage is to be called in very gradually; but after one year all payments of taxes, stamps, and telegraphic charges—everything, in short, which goes to the Government—are to be made in the new coinage. The Ta Ching Government Bank is to be made responsible, in conjunction with the Mint, for putting the new coins in circulation and for calling in the old. Meanwhile all provincial Governments are to cease minting.

PREVIOUS REFORM SCHEMES.

The scheme is admirable—on paper; but whether it is destined ever to be put into practice is quite another question. Within less than two years three pronouncements have been made by the Government on the question of currency. The first of these was the decree of October 5, 1908, in answer to a memorial by Tang Shao-yi, which declared in favour of the Kuping tael as the standard unit. The second was the elaborate list of regulations issued last September by the Ministry of Finance, with Imperial sanction, designed to regulate the improper issue by banks and provincial Administrations of paper money. The third is the decree of May 24, just quoted. Of these the first is now quietly ignored and set at naught without the slightest apparent effort having been made in all the 18 months of its existence to give it substance. The paper money regulations were beautiful to behold, but have proved a dead letter. Can we hope for anything better of the decree of May 24?

Assuredly the dollar is the unit to chose. Its range of circulation is limited; but since the time of its introduction, corresponding with the beginnings of foreign trade, for which the cumbrous sycee and the copper coinage, China's real currency, were equally impossible, it has gained recognition by business classes, and it is, at least, a definite coin. That, of course, the tael has never been. Some few tael coins and notes have, I believe, been issued, but no one ever sees or uses them, and every centre possesses its own ideas of the value of the tael. This point has particularly to be borne in mind in estimating the possibility of fixing a universal currency, because the different values of the tael and the continual fluctuations of the ratio of gold (in which China's foreign debts are paid), silver, and copper put such immense opportunities of profit into the hands of the banks and provincial officials. As for the latter's consenting to forgo the advantage of private minting, they simply will not do it.

The people would probably welcome a fixed standard of coinage when they had grasped its meaning. The dollar would not be of much use to them, any more than the tael has ever been, for the purchasing power of copper cash is so great that silver coins representing 1,000 cash or more are quite beyond their imagination. So does the thrifty French house-wife adhere to calculation in sous, even to the point of "une pièce de cent sous", rather than five francs. A few years ago silver dimes were becoming very popular as a compromise between cash and taels. There are instances even of land having been bought in this medium. But the coin was swamped by the output of ten-cash copper coins with which the provincial mints, for their private ends, have lately flooded the land.

THE TA CHING BANK.

If the Government is in earnest as regards the decree of May 24 it has a good instrument to use in the Ta Ching Bank. This institution has a capital of Kuping Tls. 7,500,000, in 50,000 fully-paid and 50,000 half-paid up shares of Tls. 100; of which 40 per cent. was subscribed from official funds and 60 per cent. by the public. It has a head office in Peking and branches in every Treaty port. The Board of Revenue does all its business through this bank, and all provincial contributions to the Board are remitted through it. For the year 1909 the Bank paid dividends of 21 per cent. on the fully-paid shares and 13 ½ per cent. on the half-paid. In the confusion of China's currency every measure strengthening the position of the one thing that at all approaches the idea of a Bank of China is to be welcomed. But it is to be feared that vested interests will prove too strong for a standard national currency for many a year to come.

OBITUARY

MR. G. S. SNOWDEN.

General regret is expressed by the habitués of Sotheby's at the death of Mr. George Seymour Snowden on the 11 th June, whose connection with the firm for upwards of thirty-two years had brought him into contact with many famous bibliophiles and collectors. As clerk of the auction-room, he was uniformly courteous and obliging, and he knew the foibles of collectors well. In private life he was an excellent amateur actor, and often employed his hobby in the cause of charity. His knowledge of the theatrical world stood him in good stead when called upon to act in the rostrum as auctioneer of relics of the stage. In this rôle he dispersed the properties of Toole and Lionel Brough at Sotheby's, and it was a matter of deep personal concern to him when the friends of the latter did not rally to the sale as he wished. His devotion to duty was recognised by all, and his genial personality will be greatly missed.

THE NEW GOLD COINAGE OF MONTENEGRO

The Vienna Royal Mint has recently struck a new gold coinage for Montenegro in commemoration of the fiftieth year of the reign of Prince Nicolas I.

The coins were minted in 100, 20 and 10 Perpera pieces, the Perpera corresponding to the Austrian krone.

The Obverse depicts the Prince's bust, after the model designed by Professor Stephan Schwartz of Vienna, surmounted by a legend in the Servian language and characters, reading " Nicolas I, Prince and Hospodar of Czerna Gora " (Montenegro) with a wreath and the Artist's initials below.

On the Reverse are shown the Montenegrin Arms, with the legend : " Principality of Czerna Gora ", inscribed above; while below, between two wreaths, is placed the denomination and date of coin.

Around the rim is engraved the motto " God defend Montenegro ", except on the 10 Perpera pieces, in which case an ornamental design is substitued.

The Silver, Nickel and Bronze Coinage of this State were struck at the Paris Mint in 1909, and dliffer but slightly from the Gold above described.

LE CONGRÈS DE NUMISMATIQUE

Les membres du Congrès international de numismatique et d'art de la médaille ont siégé aux sections, lundi matin, 27 juin écoulé, au Palais des Académies.

A la première section, c'est surtout la numismatique grecque, et un peu aussi la médiévale, qui ont fait l'objet des travaux. M. Babelon a exposé un mémoire sur les monnaies d'électrum d'Ionie; M. Haeberlin a présenté son grand ouvrage sur l'aes grave. A la section de la médaille, on a discuté la question de l'emploi du tour à réduire et de ses applications à la médaille moderne.

L'après-midi, les membres ont visité le salon international de la médaille, à l'Exposition des beaux-arts au Palais du Cinquantenaire. M. de Witte a expliqué la genèse de ce salon spécial, qui réunit environ 3.000 médailles et plaquettes, œuvres de près de 250 artistes. C'est grâce aux démarches de M. Ch. Buls chez les fonctionnaires du département des beaux-arts et chez le ministre lui-même qu'il a été créé.

M. Tourneur, secrétaire du Congrès, a fait ensuite une instructive conférence sur l'art de la médaille contemporaine. C'est grâce à l'emploi du tour à réduire, lequel s'est généralisé depuis la première application, en 1867, que cet art a pris la magnifique extension que l'on connaît : en libérant l'artiste d'un travail manuel pénible, de la collaboration du graveur sur acier, l'outil a permis au sculpteur de donner cours à son inspiration. C'est grâce encore à cet appareil que le médailleur a pu se spécialiser et que l'on voit aujourd'hui traiter en plaquettes des animaux, des scènes de genre.

Le conférencier caractérise les diverses écoles qui figurent au salon de la médaille. L'école française, avec Roty et ses nombreux émules reste à la tête du classicisme moderne; presque tous ses membres restent fidèles à la tradition gréco-romaine. L'école autrichienne est à l'antipode de la première; elle s'en tient à l'imitation stricte de la nature, elle est foncièrement réaliste. L'école allemande, également éloignée de l'une et de l'autre, est peut-être la plus intéressante, à l'heure actuelle, par l'effort colossal accompli vers la création d'un style original, au moyen de la « stylisation de la nature. »

Les autres écoles sont intermédiaires : l'école belge, qui brille actuellement d'un si vif éclat, l'école hollandaise, l'école suisse, l'école britannique, qui a de brillantes personnalités isolées. Ailleurs, notamment en Suède et aux États-Unis, les médailleurs sont à la remorque de l'école française. Une autre caractéristique de notre époque, c'est l'arrivée de l'impressionnisme dans l'art de la médaille, avec Charpentier et ses disciples. Des considérations générales terminent cette conférence, très applaudie.

Les sections du congrès ont siégé, mardi matin 28 juin, au Palais des Académies.

La section de numismatique, sous la présidence de M. Haeberlin, a examiné de nombreux mémoires. M. Blanchet (Paris), a parlé des imitations des monnaies de Tetricus Pivesus, et de son fils; M. Gohl (Budapest), des imitations de monnaies barbares en Hongrie; M. Demole (Genève), des codifications des méthodes en numismatique. M. Alvin, vicomte de Jonghe et Tourneur, ont exposé divers mémoires; M. Ricci (Milan), a parlé des dernières monnaies romaines aux mains des triumvirs.

A la section de la médaille, présidée par M. Bosselt (Allemagne), on a discuté les moyens de favoriser l'art de la médaille, de répandre le goût de la bonne médaille.

Un vœu a été émis de voir profiter davantage de tous les événements publics de quelque importance pour frapper des médailles commémoratives. M. Samuel a préconisé l'adjonction de salles des médailles, aux galeries de peinture et de sculpture des musées royaux, comme dans les musées d'Allemagne et d'autres pays.

M. de Witte — qui a tant fait pour favoriser l'art de la médaille, en créant la Société hollando-belge — a tracé un historique de la médaille en Belgique.

A 2 heures, les congressistes se sont réunis à l'Hôtel des Monnaies de Saint-Gilles, dont ils ont visité d'abord le musée. M. De Witte a rappelé la fondation de ce musée, en 1841, par arrêté royal. Auparavant, les poinçons, les coins et les matrices étaient conservés à la Chambre des comptes. Lors de l'inventaire dressé par les commissaires français, vers la fin du XVIIe siècle, la collection comprenait 10.000 pièces. Au cours de la domination française et de la domination hollandaise, environ 8.500 de ces pièces disparurent.

Le musée actuel s'est accru de collections achetées à des particuliers; il s'accroît aussi par le dépôt des poinçons et matrices effectué par nos artistes contemporains.

Sous la conduite de M. De Witte, les congressistes examinent les pièces conservées dans les vitrines : monnaies d'Albert et d'Isabelle, de Marie-Thérèse et d'autres souverains de nos provinces, jetons historiques, médailles religieuses, médailles de la Révolution belge, monnaies et médailles contemporaines.

M. Legrelle donne ensuite d'intéressantes explications sur la frappe des monnaies. C'est surtout pour l'étranger que travaille l'établissement : depuis une vingtaine d'années, il a exécuté des frappes pour vingt Etats, sans compter la Belgique. En ce moment, on n'exécute que des monnaies de nickel, pour la Belgique (avec l'initiale A du nouveau Roi) et pour le Congo. Mais, dans quelques jours, commenceront des frappes d'argent pour notre pays, pour le Siam et pour la Roumanie.

Les membres du Congrès, divisés en plusieurs groupes, visitent les ateliers, sous la conduite de MM. Legrelle, Verhas et De Witte. Ils assistent à la fonte de métal (alliage de nickel à 25 p. c. et de cuivre) à la manœuvre des lingotières, aux laminages successifs que subissent les lingots, au découpage des lames en flans par l'emporte-pièce, au blanchiment, au nettoyage et au triage des flans, à la frappe proprement dite et au triage des pièces, à l'emballage spécial pour le Congo.

De 4 à 6 heures, les sections se sont réunies à nouveau, au Palais des Académies, mercredi 29 juin.

SÉANCES DES SECTIONS.

A la première section, M. Dattari a procédé à des expériences pour justifier sa nouvelle théorie sur la monnaie romaine à l'époque de Dioclétien.

La section a examiné ensuite des mémoires relatifs à la médaille de la Renaissance. M. Habich (Munich), parle des médailles des Pays-Bas vers la fin du XVe siècle; M. Ricci (Milan), expose une théorie sur la médaille de la Renaissance. On entend la communication de divers mémoires de sigillographie, entre autres par le comte de Limburg-Stirum. Enfin, MM. Pick (Gotha) et Ricci montrent l'intérêt que présente l'enseignement de la numismatique dans les universités.

A la deuxième section, rapport de M. Verhas, avec démonstrations à l'appui, sur la persistance des empreintes sur les monnaies usées. La section discute les droits d'auteur des médailleurs et la question des patines. Elle examine le moyen d'instituer une prime pour celui qui trouvera la meilleure formule de patine naturelle, de composition du métal.

AU CABINET DES MÉDAILLES.

De deux à trois heures, mercredi, les congressistes ont visité le cabinet royal des médailles, rue du Musée, sous la conduite de MM. Alvin et Tourneur. Dans la première salle sont exposées les œuvres de nos médailleurs modernes, depuis les Wiener; la deuxième salle contient le legs Hirsch, de très beaux Tanagra et des médailles grecques; dans la troisième sont exposées d'admirables médailles de la Renaissance et quelques autres, de diverses époques. Le reste de la collection — de 65 à 70.000 pièces à peu près — est enfermé dans les casiers.

Cette collection comporte des séries tout à fait remarquables des monnaies et médailles des Pays-Bas; environ 4.000 monnaies grecques, de conservation exceptionnelle pour la plupart, venant des collections Hirsch et du Chastel; environ 4.000 monnaies papales laissées par Van Schoor; enfin, la plus remarquable collection qui existe de jetons des Pays-Bas.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE DE CLÔTURE.

A 3 heures 40 s'ouvre, dans la grande salle du Palais des Académies, l'assemblée générale de clôture, sous la présidence de M. Ch. Buls, entouré, au bureau, de MM. Babelon, De Witte, vicomte de Jonghe, Tourneur et de Breyne.

Lecture est donnée par M. Tourneur, secrétaire, des résolutions prises par la première section. Le congrès, à l'unanimité des voix, les adopte successivement, sous forme de vœux, au nombre de cinq et dont voici l'objet :

Premier vœu : Supprimer le mot avers de la terminologie numismatique et le remplacer par le mot droit.

Quatrième vœu : Inscrire partout, parmi les matières de l'enseignement supérieur, la numismatique et la sigillographie, d'abord dans l'intérêt de la science elle-même, puis dans le but de former des conservateurs capables de classer les collections et d'en publier les catalogues.

Cinquième vœu : Encourager l'étude des monnaies de compte nationales, dans chaque pays.

M. de Breyne communique les résolutions de la deuxième section, lesquelles sont, de même, adoptées à l'unanimité, notamment le vœu de voir organiser, dans les expositions des beaux-arts, des salons de la médaille contemporaine.

M. Buls prononce le discours de clôture. Allocution magnifique, traitant de l'art en général et de l'art de la médaille en particulier.

Pour montrer les fluctuations inexplicables de la valeur de la production artistique au cours des âges, l'orateur cite l'exemple que nous avons sous les yeux dans l'exposition destinée à glorifier la splendide efflorescence de l'art, depuis la fin du XVIe siècle jusqu'aux trois quarts du XVIIe.

Rappelant que presque tous les architectes de notre forum communal appartenaient à la corporation des menuisiers, ce qui explique leur originalité — leur art ne s'est pas encore figé dans les formules de Vignole — et qu'il en fut de même en Italie, aux belles époques, M. Buls parle de la réforme de l'enseignement académique, où il voudrait voir pénétrer l'intuition — comme dans notre enseignement primaire — pour initier l'élève à la technique de l'art. Revenant au congrès, il salue les membres étrangers, qui ont suscité ici une durable amitié, fondée sur l'estime et l'admiration.

M. Babelon remercie, au nom des étrangers, leurs confrères belges de leur accueil et constate le grand succès du congrès, au point de vue scientifique et artistique. D'autres délégués, en français, en italien ou en allemand, parlent dans le même sens et félicitent les organisateurs. Ils espèrent que le prochain congrès, qui aura lieu, dans dix ans, on ne sait encore où, sera aussi réussi, bien que cela paraisse difficile.

M. Buls souhaite un heureux retour à tous et lève la séance à 5 heures 20 minutes.

LA MONNAIE D'ALUMINIUM.

La Commission supérieure de l'aluminium s'est réunie hier matin, sous la présidence de M. Violle, membre de l'Institut, au Ministère des finances. Les différents rapporteurs ont exposé les résultats qu'ils avaient obtenus avec les alliages d'aluminium soumis à l'expérience.

La Commission a conclu à l'unanimité qu'il n'y avait pas lieu d'employer l'aluminum ou les alliages légers d'aluminium.

Elle s'est décidée à proposer au Ministère des finances le bronze de Sainte-Claire Deville (bronze d'aluminium à 10 o/o de ce métal).

On fabriquerait une monnaie de billon de 5 centimes, 10 centimes et 20 centimes — conformément au système métrique. De plus, ces pièces auraient des poids de 2 gr. 5, 5 grammes et 10 grammes, et enfin le diamètre de ces pièces serait de 20 millimètres, 25 millimètres et 30 millimètres. Afin d'éviter toute confusion possible avec les pièces d'or (l'alliage proposé ayant, en effet, une belle couleur jaune d'or), ces pièces seraient perforées.

THE NEW GOLD COINAGE.

Arrangements have been made by the Ottawa branch of the Royal Mint to utilize for the new Canadian gold coinage all the gold bullion produced in the Yukon territory. Already dust to the value of £ 60.000 has been received. The issue of new coins has been delayed, however, until the end of the year, so that dies with the effigy of King George V. may be obtained.

ADVERTISEMENTS

BY THE REV. A. W. HANDS

8vo. — 170 pp. — Illustrated. Price : 5/- nett.

" It must not be thought that " Common Greek Coins " is merely a catalogue of ancient Greek money, for it is far more than this. The describing of the coins is utilised to give a cleverly condensed, but most interesting, account of Greek history and mythology, commerce and progress in civilisation. The colonies and conquests of the Hellenes, their foolish feuds and transient friendships all come under survey and comment, and the usually erudite style of Greek numismatists is transformed into a brilliant and most readable essay upon the ancient Greek world. This first volume is provided with a useful index and catalogues of the monograms, initials, symbols, and various mint marks are duly set forth to the various chapters, assisted by numerous engravings of all the more important types. THE

MODERN COPPER COINS

OF THE

MUHAMMADANS

BY W. H. VALENTINE.

This work, which is in the press, is designed to popularise the study of Muhammadan copper coins, and is the outcome of a student's endeavour to identify and arrange them. To this end the author has made faithful drawings of all the specimens of this class of coin that he has been able to find. Commencing with Turkey, the reader is taken numismatically through Egypt, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, to Nigeria (for which place the Royal Mint has recently struck a new coinage) and from thence back to East Africa and Arabia. Crossing from there to Europe, the tour continues throught the Crimea, Georgia, Persia, Afghanistan, Bukhara, and terminates in Chinese Turkistan.

Upwards of 900 coins struck during the last three centuries are illustrated, and the Arabic inscriptions carefully transliterated and explained. To assist in the classification of the coins, a geographical arrangement has been adopted, and six coloured maps have been added to enable the reader to locate the various mints.

The interesting field covered by this work has never as yet been dealt with, possibly on account of the great expense involved. It has been suggested that this may be lessened by using the line block process, and printing the major portion in manuscript form. The author hopes that sufficient promises of support will be received to enable the book to be published at a price not exceeding 10/6 a copy, and he trusts that numismatists generally will give the project a hearty support.

GREEK COINS

NAXOS.

The earliest of the Greek cities of Sicily, Ionian Naxos, no longer exists even as a village, its site bears no remains of architecture, and the only signs of its once busy life are the silver coins which are sufficiently rare to be seldom found in small collections. Many travellers visit the city Taormina on the hill above the ancient site of Naxos, but few descend to the headland called Capo di Schiso at the north end of the beautiful bay in which the first colonists built their city. They were probably attracted by the safe anchorage in the little bay to the north of the river Alcesines, now called Alcantara, but the advantages of the site as a port do not appear to be great, and probably were better in 735 B.C. when the colonists first arrived. The first settlers prospered so well that only six years after their landing they were able to send out a colony to Leontini and a few years later a second colony to Catana.

Their prosperity however only lasted 332 years and then in 403 B.C. the city was utterly destroyed by Dionysius the tyrant of Syracuse.

The story of the foundation of Naxos is thus given by Strabo, who derived his information from Ephorus of Cumæ, whose history was brought down to 341 B.C.

"They say that Ephorus founded these first cities of the Greeks in Sicily, in the tenth generation from the Trojan war. For those who preceded him were so terrified by the piratical customs of the Tyrrheni and the ferocity of the savages of the neighbourhood, that they did not even venture to resort thither for the purposes of commerce. Theocles the Athenian, however, having been driven to Sicily by storms, observed both the weakness of the inhabitants, and the goodness of the soil. On his return home he was unable to persuade the Athenians to make any attempt, but he collected a numerous band of Chalcidians in Euboea with some Ionians and Dorians, whereof the most part were Megarenses, and sailed.

The Chalcidians founded Naxos, and the Dorians Megara, which was at first called Hybla" (lib. VI, p. 267, p. 26, Tuch. Ed.). Probably the earlier Greeks had been hindered from colonizing Sicily from false reports spread by the Phoenician traders as to the character of the Sicanian inhabitants in order to discourage Greek trade. Another account of the foundation of Naxos is given by Thucydides (VI. 3) "Of the Greeks, on the other hand, some Chalcidians of Euboea first sailed with Thucles as the leader of the colony, founded Naxos, and built the altar to Apollo Archegetes, which is now outside the city, and on which when any deputies to the games sail from Sicily they first sacrifice".

The leader named Ephorus by Strabo does not seem to have succeeded in founding a colony in Sicily.

The founder of Naxos according to Strabo was Theocles, and according to Thucydides Thucles, but these two names are probably meant to signify the same man. From Diodorus Siculus (XIV, 83) we gather that the first emigrants drove out the Sicanians from Tauromenum, and afterwards built their own city called Naxos on the shore, under the hill on which the native city stood. Neither of the three writers quoted above mentions any reason for the city being called Naxos; but we are told by Hellanicus (apud Steph. Byz. s. v. χαλκις) that it was given on account of the number and importance of the emigrants from the isle of that name.

Although the Naxians had apparently driven out the Sicanians from Tauromenum we see that the Ionian Greeks generally lived in friendly relations with the native race, while the Dorian Greeks were generally at war with them. The Ionian Naxians were evidently so friendly with the natives of the neighbouring city called Sergentium that at a very early period, probably about 500 B.C. the Sergentians issued silver coins very similar to those of Naxos, thus shewing that they were willing to adopt the customs of the Greeks.

We learn nothing from the Greek writers concerning the government of the first settlers, but it was probably that of an oligarchy. About 496 B.C. the city fell into the power of Hippocrates the tyrant of Gela; the story is thus briefly related by Herodotus (VII, 154).

"When Hippocrates beseiged the Callipotidæ, the Naxians, the Zancleans, the Leontini, and besides the Syracusans, and some of the barbarians, Gelon signalized himself in these several wars, and of the cities which I have numbered, not one except Syracuse escaped servitude at the hands of Hippocrates".

NAXIAN CULT OF DIONYSUS.

The Religious cult which prevailed in the new Sicilian colony was that of the island of Naxos, from which the principal colonists came.

Diodorus Siculus (X.L) thus refers to this island cult. "According to traditions the Naxians pretend that Dionysus was brought up among them, and that their island has always been very dear to him, and that it was sometimes called Dionysias". He then tells the story of the god's birth from Semele and Jupiter, and adds "the Naxians were recompensed for the education they gave to Dionysus, in fact their island received its prosperity from thatcause".

We learn from Athenaeus (78 c) that Dionysus was worshipped in the isle of Naxos as Μειλίχιος "For the Naxians, as Andriskes and Aglaosthenes recount, called Dionysus Meilichios because he gave the fruit of the fig trees, wherefore also the image of the god was made by the Naxians of the wood of the vine when they called on him as Dionysus, and of the wood of the fig tree when he was called Meilichios".

There may however have been a reference to his being also the god of the nether world, in the name which implied his character as the Placable one, the gentle, soothing, propitiatory god of the lower world.

It is noticeable that only Naxos and Teos, among the older Greek states, gave to Dionysus the position of the paramount divinity of the state. At Naxos public documents were dated by the names of his priests. (Geog. Reg. s. v. Ionia-Teos). The Sicilian Naxos is one of the few cities which chose to represent the head of this god on their coinage. Mr. L. R. Farnell, in his work "The cults of the Greek states" (p. 143) says "the numismatic evidence is in many cases as defective as the literary.

"The deep significance of this cult for the Hellenic world is by no means adequately attested by the coin representations. Most of the older currencies evidently clave to the figures of the old ancestral divinities, and where the Dionysiac type prevails, it may have been more often the commercial exigencies of the wine trade than the political prestige of the divinity that caused its adoption".

The religious influence however was probably more prominent than the commercial.

The origin of the Dionysiac cult has been traced to Thrace and Phrygia, and its influence upon Greece came from the north through Macedonia from the Balkans.

The religious ideas connected with this cult are both varied and attractive, we note for instance its influence upon poetry and the drama, its emotional nature rising into a fervour of self-abandonment akin to faith.

It would be interesting to know the stage which it had reached in the minds of the colonists when they founded Naxos in Sicily. Most probably the more ancient blood-thirsty sacrifices of bulls, and even human beings, had been exchanged for the later and milder rites.

From the ivy crown on the coins we may gather that the god was still regarded as the promoter of vegetable life in general, and not merely the god of the vine, and patron of the wine trade. From one of his names we may also gather he was connected with their beliefs in the under world, especially in the winter season, when the Dionysiac festival was certainly chthonian. Then we may picture to ourselves the women votaries of the god dancing with torches on the hill where now are the beautiful ruins of Taormina. In the spring the god's festival was connected with the rise of the sap in all vegetable life. The autumn festival of the god was that especially connected with the vintage. Drunkenness was never a serious social evil in the Greek cities, but the excitement produced by the wine was regarded as a religious reception of a divine power. Hence there was not any of the strangeness which modern minds find in the juxtaposition of drunkenness with the influence of the Holy Spirit seen in St Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians (V, 18). In Naxos the influence of the god on innocent mirth and gladness expressed by Euripides was probably prominent. In his poem (Bacch. 377) he represents the mission of Dionysus "to mingle the music of the flute with laughter, and to cause our cares to cease".

This idea is also found in Plato's Laws (653). "The gods pitying the race of man, born to toil and trouble, gave us the Muses, and Apollo their leader, and Dionysus as our festal companions".

The cult involved a sense of a divine presence, adding to the enjoyment of life on earth.

One extremely ancient custom is referred to in a passage by Photius: "Dionysus was named Μόρυχος among them (Sicilians) on account of their smearing his image with the juice of the ripe grapes and figs".

As the Athenian festival called Ὀσχοφόριον, held in October, was introduced from the isle of Naxos, as a result of the friendship of Peisistrates for Lygdamis, the Naxian tyrant, it is most probable that it was also introduced into the Sicilian colony of Naxos (Gruppe, Griech. Myth., I, p. 21).

THE TYPES.

The earliest coins used in the western colonies of both Italy and Sicily were those of Aegina, Corinth, and a little later, those of Athens, and specimens of these coins have been frequently found in Sicily. About the middle of the sixth century B.C. mints were established at Croton, Caulonia, Metapontum, Laus and Rhegium.

The earliest coin attributed to the Sicilian Naxos bears the head of a satyr on the Obv. and an incuse square quartered on the Reverse, and is so rude in style that it is probably of the same date as the earliest coins of the Italian Greek Colonies.

This first type is probably an imitation of the satyr's head which appeared on the coins of the island of Naxos, somewhat earlier than 550 B.C., but not before the first colonists set forth from their island home.

The type is therefore evidence of continued intercourse with the old home, as is also that which took its place, the head of Dionysus, the god of their forefathers.

Between the years 510 and 480 B.C. the Naxians adopted the head of Dionysus as their obverse type most probably about 500 B.C., because four years afterwards Hippocrates took the city, and the type points to a time of liberty in the choice of the citizens. The only coins remaining of this period are drachms archaic in style.

The eye of the god is formed like those of the earliest Athenian coins, full-faced, although the head is in profile.

The style of the god's head is similar to that of his head depicted on the vases of the sixth century B.C. A good example may be seen on Plate XXXV of Farnell's "Cults of the Greek States".

The head on these drachms is the most archaic representation of Dionysus found on any Greek coins. In judging of the date of these coins by the style of art it should be remembered that the artists of the western Greek colonies were generally in advance of those in the motherland.

The drachms and obols are considered by modern experts to belong to the period between 510 and 480 B.C.

The flat fabric and round contour of these coins shew the influence of the mints of Southern Italy, and we should note that a similar dotted border appears on the contemporary coins of Zancle which were influenced by the mint of Rhegium.

In the later periods we shall find the head of Dionysus represented on the coins of Thasos, Thebes, Cydonia, Heraclea and Lampsacus. All the full length figures of the god, with the exception of that on the early coins of Sergetium near Naxos, belong to the later periods.

The Reverse type is in the same style; a bunch of grapes with a leaf on each side, treated in an archaic conventional manner.

A considerable interval of time must have passed between the issue of these drachms and the coins bearing the satyr's head.

It must naturally be difficult to know what men thought about the designs on the coins they used in such distant times, but we may feel sure that the early types were both commemorative and religious. In the case of the Naxian types their old island home was commemorated, and also the deity their fathers worshipped, his head was chosen for the Obverse, and his emblem which became the παράσημον or badge of the city, a bunch of grapes, formed the Reverse type. Probably the commemorative instinct was stronger than the religious in the fifth and sixth centuries B.C. but later religion decided the choice of types.

The three cities which adopted the Aeginetic system of weights were Naxos, Zancle and Himera.

Only drachms however are known of these cities with the exception of one coin in the Ward collection (n° 202) which weighs 146.3 grains troy.

A didrachm we should expect to weigh 180 grains.

The loss of 33 grains in this unique specimen seems excessive for loss by wear, and therefore we must hope for the discovery of a heavier coin before we can be quite sure of the use of didrachms of this standard.

The other cities which issued coins during this first period adopted the Euboic Attic standard, so called because it was the standard in use in Euboea and Attica.

As three Aeginetic drachms of 90 grains each, were equivalent to one Euboic Attic tetradrachm of 270 grains, the two systems could be used without much inconvenience.

Each Aeginetic drachm contained about eight Obols of the Euboic Attic standard.

Dr Imhoof-Blumer however explains the drachms weighing 90 grains as thirds of the tetradrachms weighing 270 grains, and we know that the Corinthians used thirds of their staters.

This theory however does not agree with the fact that the smaller coins do not fall in with the Euboic-Attic standard, but the small coins are frequently out of harmony with an ideal weight in Magna Graecia.

The three cities which used the Æginetic standard gave it up at the end of this first period.

There was another standard of weight in use among the cities of Sicily during the early period, based on the pound or litra of bronze.

This Sicilian litra corresponded in value to 13½ grains troy of silver, and small silver coins of this weight were issued, and called silver litræ. These could not be harmonized with the Aeginetic coinage of Naxos or Zancle, but were exactly one-twentieth of the Euboic-Attic tetradrachms, and this fact may have helped forward the adoption of that weight standard by all the Greek colonial cities in Sicily.

The Euboic-Attic	tetradrachm	of 270	gr. = 20 litra piece.
—	drachm	of 67.5	gr. = 5 litra piece.
		13.5	gr. = 1 litra.
one sixth of a drachm		11.25	gr. = 1 obol.

SILVER COINS OF NAXOS[1].

Weight: 211.5 grains.

Obv. Head of a Satyr to right, very archaic and rude, the ear of the Satyr in long and pointed.

Rev. A rude incuse square, quartered and divided diagonally.

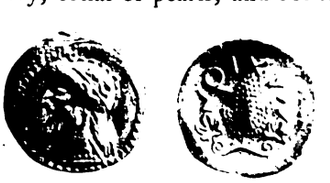
It is illustrated in P. Gardner's "Types of Greek Coins", Plate III, n° 19, and also in Num. Chron., Series III, Vol. IV, Plate XII, and described on p. 12.

The coin now in the British Museum came from the Santorin find discovered in 1821.

It may be an imitation of the Satyr's head which appeared on the coinage of the island Naxos about the same period.

II. Drachm. Weight: 90 grains. Size .8.

Obv. Head of Dionysus to left with archaic pointed beard, long hair and wreath of ivy, collar of pearls, and border of dots.



Rev. NAXION. A bunch of grapes hanging from stalk, between two leaves.

On one specimen the letter A is seen on right of stalk.

1. These coins are all rare and only seldom occur for sale.

III. Obol. Weight : 11.5 grains. Size .45.
The Types are the same as those of the drachms.

SERGENTIUM OR ERGETIUM.

Sergentium is known to us only by some rare coins of about the same period as those of Naxos described above. The city probably stood on the eastern slopes of Mount Etna, a few miles from Naxos and was probably a city of the Sicels.

The coins point to the friendly relations which must have existed between these two cities. The slopes of Etna have always been famous for their vineyards.

These coins bearing the inscription MEP, for ΣEP, are described in the British Museum catalogue as "uncertain of Lucania or Bruttium" but their similarity to the coins of Naxos has caused Ettore Pais and Dr B. V. Head to attribute them to the Sicilian city near Naxos. Confer p. 117 Ancient Italy, by Ettore Pais translated by Curtes.

I. Stater. Weight : 122.1 grain. Size .95.

Obv. MEP. A naked bearded figure of Dionysus standing to left, holding a kantharos in his right hand, and in his left, a long branch of a vine which passes over his shoulder and reaches to the ground : border of dots and a band.

Rev. A branch of vine to right, having three leaves, and one large bunch of grapes hanging down, and a very small one upwards : border of dots on a band.

II. Twelfth.

Obv. MEP. Head of bearded Dionysius.

Rev. A bunch of grapes. (To be continued.)

SANGERS, GERTRUDE (Belg.). Widow of Florent Florissone ; acted as Mint-master at Antwerp, from 13. January 1580 to 26. January 1581, and again from 16. December 1585 to 30. August 1587.

SANQUIRICO, PAOLO (Ital.). Architect, Modeller in wax, and Medallist of the latter part of the sixteenth century and first three decades of the seventeenth. He was born at Parma in 1565 and died at Rome in 1630. He was a pupil of Camillo Mariani. His services were rewarded with a situation at the Papal court. Bolzenthal tells us that the medallic art was only a secondary employment with him, to which he appeared a stranger long before his death. His likenesses in coloured wax are deserving of notice, and some of his medals, especially those bearing the portrait of Paul V., are drawn to the life.

In the British Museum Collection are two Portrait-medals of Paul V., by this artist ; the one, dated 1608, signed : P. SANQVIRIC. has a representation of St. Peter's on the Rℒ. ; and the other, of 1609, signed : SANQVIRICVS shows a Fort (of Ferrara) on the Rℒ. There is another, of the same Pope, dated 1613.

This Medallist's signature occurs under various forms : P. SANQ. ; — P. SANQVIRIC. ; — P. SANQVIRIO ; — PAUL SANQVIR. ; — SANQVIRICVS, etc.

A French medal by Giovanni Paolo has been erroneously ascribed to this artist or also to Paolo Selvatico (Armand, III, p. 140).

SANSON, JUSTIN CHRYSOSTOME (French). Contemporary Sculptor, born at Nemours, pupil of Jouffroy, and Lequien. By him are several Portrait-medallions in bronze, amongst which I have noted : 1870. Dr Goupil des Pallières ; — 1887. M. Sanson ; — 1888. M. J. D ; — 1904. — M. Testard ; — Paul Baudouin, etc.

SANSON (French). This signature occurs on a Portrait-medal of Dr Jules Le Baron.

SANTA-CROCE, GIROLAMO (Ital.). Sculptor and Goldsmith, who resided at Naples ; born in 1498, died in 1533. By him is a Portrait-medal of the Neapolitan poet Jacopo Sannazaro, of which there are two varieties of reverses : obv. ACTIVS.SYNCERVS. Laureate bust to l. ; Rℒ (a) No legend. The Virgin, Joseph and angels worshipping the Child Jesus (after Sannazaros' poem) ; (b). No legend. Half nude male figure (Sannazaro?) crowned by a female, in the presence of two other personages, in front of a temple ; diam. 35 mill.

The attribution of this medal to Santacroce results from a letter addressed in 1524 by the Neapolitan historian Summonzio to Marcantonio Michieli, and published by E. Cicogna.

SANTA-CROCE, PILIPPO surnamed PIPPO (Ital.). Gem-engraver of the sixteenth century, who was practising his art not only on gems, but also on cherry- and plum-stones, on which he engraved figures which were almost imperceptible to the naked eye. He was at first only a shepherd who amused himself in carving rustic toys, when Count Filippino Doria, having met him in the duchy of Urbino, took him to Rome, and then to Genoa, where henceforward Pippo, freed from the cares of need, was enabled to develop the talents with which nature had endowed him. His numerous children, the PIPPI, followed their father's career, and became likewise Engravers of mark towards the end of the sixteenth century, applying themselves especially, as was then the fashion, to copying antiques (Babelon, Pierres gravées, p. 257).

In the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, a bronze Plaque, in high relief, representing a full length figure of Judith holding the head of Holofernes, has been attributed, without definite authority, to Jacopo Sansovino (Fortnum, op. cit., p. 64, 7431).

Dr Bode describes also among Sansovino's works : Statuette of Weeping Cupid ; — Group, youth on dolphin's back (inkstand) ; — Allegory on the writing of History (inkstand).

SANTARELLI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO (Ital.). Gem-engraver, Modeller in wax, and Medallist, born in 1769 in the Abruzzi, died at Florence in 1826, where he spent the greater part of his life, and was for many years Professor at the Academy.

This artist owed his success to his extraordinary natural abilities. His cut gems are of exceptional beauty, and his Portraits and Basreliefs in wax belong to the finest and most delicate productions of the art.

Eliza Bonaparte and Felix I.
Princes of Lucca and Piombino.

Santarelli worked for some time at the Milanese Mint, and from there was sent to Parma as Engraver to the Mint of that city. By him are said to be the dies for the coinage of Felix and Eliza for Lucca and Piombino (1805-1814) and Marie Louise for Parma, 1815 (after Manfredini's models), but the accuracy of this statement I cannot substantiate.

Among the numerous medallic productions of the Engraver I have seen descriptions of the following: Eliza Bonaparte, named Grand Duchess of Tuscany, 1809; obv. Bust of Felix, Prince of Lucca; R/. Bust of Eliza, with the additional title of GRAN. DUCHESSA DI TOSC.; — Michael Angelo, 1812; Prize Medal of the Academy of Fine Arts of Florence; — Eliza and Felix, Princess of Lucca and Piombino; Prize Medal of the Academy of Lucca; (obv. illustrated); — Marie Louise, Grand Duchess of Parma; obv. executed after Manfredini's scudo, which had found special favour in high quarters; various types of reverses, mostly engraved by his pupils, as that on the building of the Taro bridge; — Portrait-medal of C. Salicetti (Bon. Artium Patronus), signed A. S. F., and dedicated from Genoa to Vassalo, 1805.

The artist's signature occurs usually as SANTARELLI F., or A. S. F.

SATTLER, HANS (Germ.). Mint-master at Nuremberg, 1622, and Vienna, 1629. Ammon states that he was responsible for the copper coinage at Nuremberg. As early as 1594 he is mentioned as a Line-engraver, but he never cut dies for coins.

SATTLER, VEIT (Germ.). Mint-warden at Kempten (Bavaria), circ. 1540.

SATURNINUS (Rom.). Gem-engraver of the early part of the first century of our era. His signature CATOPNEINOY occurs on a sardonyx Portrait-cameo, in the Berlin Museum, representing a female bust (possibly that of Antonia, wife of Drusus). The inscription is incuse, in very tiny rounded letters which offer every guarantee of authenticity. The portrait is exceedingly well executed, and, says Furtwängler, its author is to be classed among the best artists of his time.

Portrait-cameo of Antonia (?)

The Berlin Museum gem was originally in Caroline Murat's collection, and later in the Seguin. Stephani allows the work to be excellent, but thinks the drapery has been probably retouched.

King mentions another gem bearing the same inscription: The Dioscuri (in the Thorwaldsen Museum), but adds that this inscription has nothing to do with the artist.

lieu's Greek Testament". The words of course, come from Virgil, who wrote them in the two hundred and sixty-second line of his Fifth Book of the Æneid. There, as we read by the context, the son of Anchises is conferring honours after victory, and gives a coat of mail wrought in gold to a happy recipient to be his "Decus et tutamen in armis"; his ornament and defence in war.

In consequence of Queen Victoria ascending the throne on the twentieth day of June 1837, all the crowns of Type 4 minted before June 20th in the years 1893 to 1900, both inclusive, have a different year of the reign impressed upon the edge to those coined on and after June 20th. The crowns dated 1893, with the edge inscribed DECUS ET TUTAMEN * ANNO REGNI LVII * are extremely rare when in a choice state of preservation.

Queen Victoria died on Tuesday, January 22nd 1901. No crowns were coined in that year.

THE NEW COINAGE

AN AUSTRALIAN DESIGNER.

It is announced that Mr. Bertram Mackennal, A.R.A., has been chosen to design and model the new Coinage and the Coronation medal, which will be struck next year in commemoration of King George's accession. The appointment has a special fitness from the fact that Mr. Mackennal was the first artist from the Overseas Dominions to secure election to the Royal Academy. But apart from sentiment, he has justified his latest commission by the beautiful series of medals which he executed for the Olympic Games of 1907.

In the new coinage Mr. Mackennal's design will probably show the head of the Monarch turned to the left again, as in Queen Victoria's reign. It is not likely that the new coinage will be ready for circulation before the date of the Coronation in May next.

The son of an Australian sculptor, Mr. Mackennal was born in Melbourne in 1863, and coming to Europe in early manhood, studied for some years in Paris. His name first came into public notice through the controversy aroused by his life-size nude, "Circe", which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in the nineties. In the opinion of the Hanging Committee, the base of the statue was too realistic for exhibition at Burlington House, and that was discreetly covered. The "Circe" was shown at the Franco-British Exhibition three years ago, happily without the offending drapery. After executing several memorial statues of Queen Victoria, one of which was erected at Blackburn, Mr. Mackennal received two important London commissions — the South African War Memorial at Islington and the pedimental group for the offices of the Local Government Board. In 1907 the artist's "Earth and the Elements" was purchased for the nation under the terms of the Chantry Bequest, and in the following year he was even more fortunate, the same trustees purchasing for £1,000 his life-sized marble, "Diana Wounded", now in the large sculpture hall at the Tate Gallery. In the present Academy the Australian sculptor is represented by a beautiful statuette, "The Mother".

In addition to the new coinage and the Coronation medal, Mr. Mackennal is also engaged upon the statuary which is to decorate the St. Paul's Cross, now being put up in the Cathedral gardens. The late Mr. H.C. Richards, K.C., left £5,000 in his will for the rebuilding of Paul's Cross. After prolonged discussion, Mr. Blomfield, the architect, was commissioned to design a Doric column to be set up on the north-eastern side of the Cathedral, the "preaching" platform being enclosed by a baluster wall of Portland stone and black marble. Mr. Mackennal has modelled four cherubs for the base, and is also designing and modelling the bronze figure of St. Paul, which is to surmount the column. It may be said in brief that none of the younger British sculptors can claim a more varied experience in public and private work than Mr. Mackennal.

ALBERT-STEVEN VAN MUYDEN.

Les derniers honneurs ont été rendus vendredi, le 15 juillet, au cimetière de Plainpalais, à Albert-Steven van Muyden, décédé à Genève, après une longue et douloureuse maladie, dans sa soixante et unième année.

Le défunt était l'aîné des fils d'Alfred van Muyden, le peintre des doux intérieurs familiaux et des horizons apaisants de la campagne romaine. Il fit d'abord de bonnes études d'architecture, et, grâce à un don rare de dessinateur, à un goût très affiné et à une originalité qui en eût fait un précurseur, il serait devenu un architecte peut-être célèbre s'il avait eu le moindre sens des affaires. Albert Steven van Muyden était, à cet égard, et il est resté toute sa vie d'une candeur d'enfant. Dans son intégrité scrupuleuse, il n'ouvrait les yeux à la rouerie d'autrui que lorsqu'il en avait souffert — mais pour cette fois-là seulement, et, le lendemain, sa confiance le remettait aussi désarmé que la veille à la merci de nouveaux flibustiers. Les perpétuelles désillusions que lui avait values cette honorable lacune l'affligeaient plus encore que les pertes financières qui les lui annonçaient. Il avait fini par ne plus envisager une entrée en relation que comme le prélude obligé d'un méchant tour dont il serait victime, et son abord en avait pris quelque chose d'un peu rugueux. Mais dès qu'il avait reconnu chez autrui la loyauté qui l'inspirait lui-même, il se donnait avec une simplicité de cœur, une sincérité, une reconnaissance d'affection dont le souvenir fait monter des larmes dans les yeux de ceux qui l'ont connu.

Si les hommes en chair et en os trompaient souvent A.-S. van Muyden, l'œuvre de leurs mains ne le trompait guère. Il avait le sens inné, le flair de l'authentique et du faux. Tout jeune homme encore et avant d'avoir entrepris une étude attentive de la numismatique, il déterminait presque au premier coup d'œil l'origine et la date d'une monnaie usée et encrassée; une moue particulière dénonçait la contrefaçon. Plus tard, il étudia. « Il avait une prédilection marquée pour les monnaies romaines, écrit de lui M. Eug. D. dans le Journal de Genève. Ce qui le captivait dans la numismatique antique, c'était peut-être moins les recherches historiques ou métrologiques que les questions d'art et l'iconographie des portraits. Les traits des 300 empereurs de Rome et de Constantinople lui étaient si familiers qu'il classait à l'instant une monnaie sans s'aider des légendes. Il ne se bornait pas à admirer, il dessinait, et cela, de l'avis unanime des artistes et spécialistes, avec une acuité de trait, une perfection graphique, un respect du modèle qui en faisaient autant de petits chefs-d'œuvre d'art dans ce genre spécial. Saisissant avec promptitude le caractère d'une pièce ancienne, il savait la rendre avec une grande sobriété de traits. Les services qu'il a rendus de ce chef à la Revue suisse de numismatique sont importants et ne seront pas oubliés. »

JAMES ATKINS.

We regret to state that Mr. James Atkins, for some time resident at Ipswich, a well-known botanist and authority on numismatics, died there on Friday, July 8th. Mr. Atkins had only been ailing for about a week with lung trouble, and his death will come as a surprise. The deceased gentleman was born at Beccles, and was apprenticed to the late Mr. George Syder, Market-place. Early in life he went to London, where he secured employment as an upholsterer and cabinet maker. He quickly made progress, and was able to set up a business for himself at Bromley, in Kent, where he remained until he had made a competence. Whilst there he was much respected, and had the good fortune to come into contact with Darwin, Lord Avebury, and other well-known people interested in botany, which was his main hobby at that time, though he also took an active part in the temperance and co-operative movements. He was one of the greatest experts on ferns, assisting Mr. E. J. Lowe in his work "Our British Ferns," his name being mentioned in that book along with Wollaston, another East Anglian. Mr. Atkins, after retiring from business, found himself able to give increased attention to the subject of coins, in which he had always been interested. His new hobby developed into quite a commercial pursuit, in which he turned over a great deal of money. He found time to put a great deal of the knowledge that he acquired into writing, and two of his books on the subject are classics, namely, " Coins and tokens of the possessions and colonies of the British Empire, " published by Quaritch in 1889, and "Tradesmen's tokens of the 18th century," which has never been superseded up to the present. After leaving Bromley Mr. Atkins lived for a time at Beccles, and then removed to Bungay. He subsequently removed to Ipswich and made himself widely known and much thought of amongst educationists. He arranged the local coins and tokens in the Ipswich Museum as a labour of love, and made the best collection of Ipswich and district plants that has ever been made. The list was published in the second volume of the journal of the Ipswich Field Club last year. Mr. Atkins was a wonderfully hard worker, and he found that his devotion to his hobbies produced insomnia, which led him to give up the business of dealing in coins, and to reduce his work in other ways. When invited last month to be President of the Ipswich Field Club he reluctantly declined the honour. It is, however, a fact that this season he began making a collection of Suffolk grasses which, unfortunately, he did not live to complete. Mr. Atkins, who was 73 years of age, was twice married, and leaves a widow. The children of his first wife are, of course, all grown up. His two elder sons and daughter are doing well in America, two daughters reside at Bromley, one son in the neighbourhood of London, and the younger daughter at Colchester. The recent fatal accident to his son—a youth of 17—no doubt caused him much distress of mind.

NUMISMATIC SOCIETIES, MUSEUMS, &c.

British numismatic. 22 June. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the Chair. — The President announced that His Majesty the King had graciously pleased to become Patron of the Society.

The Earl of Altamont and Col. H.F. Bowles were elected Members.

The President read a paper on ' The Winchcombe Mint, ' in which he transferred to it the coins of the Saxon and Norman period bearing the mint-name WINCELES, variously contracted. Most of these had previously been attributed to Winchelsea, but Mr. Carlyon-Britton, following his rule that the mints were restricted to boroughs, pointed out that prior to the Conquest Winchelsea had not that status, whereas Winchcombe in Gloucestershire, anciently known as Wincelcumbe and Winchelscomb, was a residence of Coenwulf early in the ninth century, when he founded its abbey; and in the time of Canute it was not only a borough, but, with its surrounding district, also a county of itself.

Mr. W. J. Andrew, Secretary, contributed the first part of his treatise on ' The Viking Coinage in England. ' Of the series contemporary with the reign of Alfred, the initial difficulty was the place-name intended by the legend CVNET TI, which so many of the coins bore as their place of origin. After calling attention to the Christian character of their designs and inscriptions, and the translation of the see of St. Cuthbert to Chester-le-Street, near Durham, at the very date of their issue, he cited many examples of transposition of the letters C and T on both the coins and manuscripts of this period, and even on the regal coinage in King Canute's name, which, he suggested, was due to the close similarity of those two letters in the rustic hand. This would be used by the monks of Chester-le-Street when sending their instructions to the moneyers of York for the dies, and no doubt accounted for the name of their see, Cuneca-Civitas, being contracted and misread as CVNET TI, instead of CVNEC CI, on the coins. He added that Mr. Anscombe had, in support of this explanation, quoted a passage from Bede, ' H. E., ' IV. xxii, p. 250, in which the same name is written Tunnacæstir in the manuscript, which could only be due to a similar and contemporary error. Another mint, SCELDFORD, Mr. Andrew assigned to Shelford on the Trent, supporting his arguments by comparison of the remains there of a dock and defensive trenches with similar works at Repton, Fulham, Cambridge, and other places where the Danish army was known to have wintered, and by the presence in Shelford Church of a contemporary stone cross of distinctly Scandinavian origin.

Exhibitions.

Mr. S. M. Spink showed a series of coins illustrating Mr. Andrew's paper, and Miss H. Farquhar a variety of the CUNETTI mint.

Mr. Henry Laver, an early British stater found near Maldon.

Mr. F. A. Walters, Roman second brass bearing the legend BRITANNIA, found at Croydon.

Mr. M. Maish, a half-noble of Richard II. without the continental titles, and a shilling of Charles I. with mint-marks rose and plume.

Mr. Henry Garside, a gold political medal issued at Accrington.

Mr. A. H. Baldwin, the recently designed florin and sixpence for Australia.

Mr. L. A. Lawrence a penannular gold bracelet of a class formerly called " prehistoric ring-money. "

Presentation.

Mr. J. Sanford Saltus presented to the Society's collection a badge of the Society of Colonial Dames of America.

British Numismatic. — July 20. — Mr. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair. — Mr. Herbert M. Ellis and Mr. Alfred B. Jacobs were elected Members. — Dr. Philip Nelson gave an interesting address, illustrated by lantern-slides, on ' Historical Events as depicted on our Coinage ', in which he explained the chain of cause and effect which linked the devices, materials, and even denominations of our money, from the earliest times to the present day, with passing events and upheavals in our constitutional government for the time being; in particular he illustrated a series of obsidional coins issued during the wars of Charles I., which still bore the original designs and plate-marks of the silver plate from which the material for the money had been supplied.

Dr. Ernest C. Carter exhibited a denier of Guy, Bishop of Cambray, recently found in a garden near Cheltenham; and Mr. L. A. Lawrence compared this with a series of the Cambray coinage of the period, explaining that drastic proclamations were issued about A.D. 1300 to prohibit the importation of such money into England. Lieut.-Col. Morrieson exhibited the silver medal of the recent International Numismatic Congress at Brussels. — Mr. S. H. Hamer showed seven unrecorded varieties of the eighteenth-century token with the device of a cat and the legend : " My freedom I among slaves enjoy ".

FINDS.

OLD COINS FOUND IN COUNTY ROSCOMMON.

While a young girl named Maggie Waldron was digging by the side of an old mound near her residence at Crevy, Loughglynn, she came across a number of very old coins about four inches from the surface. The coins consisted of a half-sovereign, bearing the date of William III., 1696; a half sovereign, dated George I., 1715; three silver coins the size of the present day half-crown, dated William III., 1696 and 1697, and six coins bearing the date William III., 1696. All the coins are in a remarkable state of preservation, the dates and imprints being plainly visible. In the same place a few years ago two boats or canoes about 40 feet in length, and made out of a solid piece of oak, were discovered.

VARIA

In a return issued on Friday, July 22nd by the Home Office the following particulars were given of the coinage offences in which proceedings were instituted by the Director of Public Prosecutions during 1909.

Of the convictions: i. e. 120, under the Coinage Offences Act, which showed an increase of 15 on the number for 1908, no fewer than 40, or exactly one-third, were for felony, 14 being for the manufacture of counterfeit coin, 11 for the felonious possession of moulds and other implements used in such manufacture, and 15 for uttering or possessing counterfeit coin after the prisoner had been previously convicted of a similar offence. Of the 40 persons convicted of felony, &c., 11 were new offenders, and the remaining 29 persons who had been previously convicted of offences against the Coinage Act, many of them several times.

In connection with the coinage prosecutions for the year, about 1,550 pieces of counterfeit coin were taken possession of by the police. In 1908, 1,680 pieces were seized, but as 779 of those were found in the possession of one person, the number of counterfeit coins taken in 1909 makes it apparent that more were in circulation than in the previous year.

LA MONNAIE DE LA COMMUNE

M. Maxime Vuillaume, qui vient de publier les Cahiers rouges du temps de la Commune, rapporte une interview avec Camélinat, qui alors dirigeait la Monnaie. Les pièces de cinq francs, frappées à cette époque, sont devenues extrêmement rares, bien qu'on en eût frappé 600.000, parce qu'elles ont été retirées de la circulation. Elles reproduisaient le modèle adopté par la République de 1848, l'Hercule de Dupré, avec cette seule différence que le différent, c'est-à-dire la marque du directeur, était un petit trident. On avait maintenu en exergue la légende Dieu protège la France, moins par principe que par commodité : on avait besoin d'argent, on frappait vite sans rien changer : c'est ainsi que Dieu protégea la Commune jusqu'au mois de mai 1871. Cependant, dix mille pièces du même type portèrent sur la tranche, au lieu de cette devise, les mots Travail, Garantie nationale, dont l'exécution avait été confiée au ciseleur Jean Garnier, un des fondateurs de l'Internationale et au graveur Lupeau. La Commune n'a pas frappé d'autre monnaie que l'écu de cinq francs. Elle en a produit pour 2.400.000 frs., représentés par les lingots d'argent qu'elle avait tirés de la Banque de France, par une grande quantité de vaisselle aux armes impériales provenant des Tuileries et de la Légion-d'Honneur, par des reliquaires et autres objets de collection trouvés dans les appartements de l'impératrice. M. Camélinat assure qu'aucune des pièces jetées au creuset n'avait de valeur artistique. Le 24 mai, il restait à la Monnaie 153.000 frs. Cette somme, envoyée dans deux fourgons à la mairie de la place Voltaire, servit à payer les derniers combattants de la Commune dont chacun toucha cinq francs.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

In the course of excavations on the site of the new County Hall a discovery has been made, the importance of which, from an historical and archæological point of view, can hardly be overestimated. The principal feature of the discovery consists of a Roman boat. As this is a unique example of such a find in Great Britain, it is of greater interest than the clinker-built boat of King Alfred's time, discovered at Walthamstow a few years ago, and of other Viking boats found in various parts of the kingdom.

A considerable portion of the vessel, which is of oak, is still covered, and until the earth is removed it will not be possible to ascertain its exact size; but, so far as can be judged, the vessel would seem to be about 50ft. long and 16ft. beam. Several articles were found in the boat, comprising some shreds of Roman pottery, bones, iron nails, glass gaming buttons, iron-studded soles of footwear, a coin of Tetricus in Gaul (268-273), a coin of Carausius in Britain (286-293), which is stated by the keeper of coins at the British Museum to be of date 290 or 291, and a coin of Allectus in Britain (293-296); and these objects are stated by the authorities of the Geological Museum to be the safest evidence as to the age of the boat, which may therefore be assigned to the end of the third or beginning of the fourth century A.D.

BESTIMMUNG VERSCHLIFFENER MUNZEN.

Es kann ab und zu der Fall eintreten, dass eine gänzlich unkenntlich gewordene, total verschliffene Münze bestimmt werden sollte und dann gewisse Auskunft ergäbe. Georges Verhas in Brüssel teilt nun in dem soeben erschienenen vierten Heft der Mémoires des internationalen Numismatiker Kongresses mit, in welcher Weise das Münzbild im Innerndes Metalls erhalten bleibt, und wie die Eigenschaften der gepressten Struktur wieder auf der Oberfläche können sichtbar gemacht werden. Die Arbeit ist höchst interessant und Darlegungen wie Schlüsse durchaus einleuchtend. Das Verfahren kann bei Münzen aus allen Zeitaltern und bei allen Metallen geübt werden, sofern es sich um Prägungen handelt; Gussmünzen sind ausgeschlossen. Von jetzt ab wird also das Wort "unkenntlich" aus numismatischen Beschreibungen sozusagen zu verschwinden haben.

ZANCLE or MESSINA.

The terrible earthquake which recently devastated the Straits of Messina has brought the name of this ancient city before the notice of all the world. The site has always been subject to convulsions, and the ancients believed that originally the island of Sicily was joined to the mainland, and separated by volcanic eruption, and they pointed to the name Rhegium as commemorating the division of the island from Bruttium.

The Chalcidian colonists of Cumæ in the eighth century B.C. realizing the importance of securing a safe passage through the straits of Messina, sent colonists to found a city, opposite to Rhegium, on the Sicilian shore. This appears to have happened about ten years after the foundation of Naxos, the first Greek colony in Sicily. The story of the foundation of Zancle will be first given in the words of the ancient historians, and then the witness of the earliest coins to their account of the history of the city will be explained.

Thucydides VI, 4 "Zancle, again, was originally founded from Cumæ, the Chalcidian city in the country of the Opici, by some freebooters (λῃστῶν) who went there; but afterwards a great number went from Chalcis and the rest of Euboea, and shared with them in the occupation of the land; its founders being Perieres and Crataemenes, one from Cumæ and the other from Chalcis. As regards its name, it was at first called Zancle by the Sicels, because the site resembles a reaping-hook in figure, and the reaping-hook is called by the Sicels zanclon. Afterwards these settlers were expelled by some Samians and other Ionians, who landed in Sicily while flying from the Medes; and again, Anaxilas, tyrant of Rhegium, having not long after expelled the Samians, and colonized their country with a mixed population, changed its name to Messana, after his own original country".

Strabo (Bk. VI, p. 268). "It was from a colony of the Messenians of the Peloponnesus that it was called Messana, having been originally named Zancle, on account of the crookedness (σκολιότητα) of the coast, for anything crooked was called zanclion. It was originally founded by the people of Naxos near Catana".

This last assertion is not supported by Thucydides. Pausanias however makes a far greater mistake in regard to the date at which these events occurred (Bk. IV, 23). Anaxilas persuaded the Messenians to settle with him, and told them on their arrival that there was a disagreement between him and the Zanclei, who possessed a very delightful country, and a city situated in a very convenient part of Sicily. He added that if he should conquer this country he would give it to them. After the Messenians had approved this intention Anaxilas passed over with them into Sicily.

Zancle was at first infested with robbers; and as the country was situated in a desert, the robbers enclosed with a wall all the parts about the port, and built a castle, by means of which they might both attack persons at sea, and defend themselves when assaulted. Their leaders were the Samian Crataemenes and Perieres of Chalcis who appear to have afterwards colonized others of the Greek settlements. And then indeed, Anaxilas vanquished the Zanclaei in a naval battle and the Messenians in a land engagement.

But the Zanclaeans being afterwards besieged by the Messenians by land and the Rhegians by sea, and having their wall thrown down, fled to the altars and temples of the gods. Anaxilas therefore ordered the Messenians to cut off the suppliant Zancleans and to make slaves of the rest together with their wives and children.

Gorgos however and Manticlus entreated Anaxilas not to force them to act in the same impious manner in which their kindred had acted towards them. After this the Zanclaeans rising from the altars, and oaths being given on both sides, the place came to be inhabited by both in common. But the name of the city was changed and called Messene instead of Zancle.

These events happened in the twenty-ninth Olympiad"...

Now the twenty-ninth Olympiad represents the years 665-662 B.C., and the date is manifestly wrong. These events really happened in the seventy-first Olympiad, i. e. in the year 494 B.C. Diodorus Siculus gives the right date (XI, CXLVIII); writing of the year 496 B.C. he says. "In this same year died also Anaxilas, tyrant of Rhegium and Zancle, after a reign of eighteen years". Aristotle in his work on Politics (Bk. V, 3) gives Zancle as an example of the fact that "a state composed of different nations is liable to seditions until their differences are blended together".

Herodotus tells us the story of how the Samians determined to sail to the west.

"For the Zanclaeans of Sicily at this very time, sending messengers to Ionia invited the Ionians to Cale Acte, wishing them to found a city of Ionians there.

This Cale Acte, as it is called, belongs to the Sicilians and is in that part of Sicily that faces the Tyrrhenians. Accordingly, when they invited them, the Samians alone of all the Ionians set out, and with them such Milesians as had escaped by flight. During this time the following incident occurred. The Samians on their way to Sicily touched on the country of the Epizephyrian Locri, and the Zanclaeans, both they and their king, whose name was Scythes, were employed in the besieging of a Sicilian city, desiring to take it, and Anaxilas, tyrant of Rhegium, who was then at variance with the Zanclaeans, understanding this, held correspondence with the Samians, persuaded them that it would be well not to trouble themselves about Cale Acte to which they were sailing, but to seize the city of Zancle, which was destitute of inhabitants.

The Samians were persuaded, and possessed themselves of Zancle, whereupon the Zanclaeans, hearing that their city was occupied, went to recover it, and called to their assistance Hippocrates, tyrant of Gela, for he was their ally. But when Hippocrates came with his army as if to assist them, he having thrown into chains Scythes, king of the Zanclaeans, who had already lost his city, and his brother Pythogenes, sent them away to the city of Inycum: after having conferred with the Samians, and given and received oaths, he betrayed the rest of the Zanclaeans; and this was the reward agreed upon by the Samians, that he should have one half of the moveables and slaves in the city, and that Hippocrates should have for his share all that was in the country. Accordingly having put in chains the greater part of the Zanclaeans, he treated them as slaves, and three hundred of the principal citizens he delivered to the Samians to be put to death; the Samians however would not do this.

Scythes, king of the Zanclaeans, made his escape from Inycum to Himera, and from thence passed over into Asia, and went to king Darius. Darius considered him the most just of all the men who had come to him from Greece.

For, having asked permission of the king, he went to Sicily, and returned back from Sicily to the king; and at last being very rich he died among the Persians of old age. Thus the Samians being freed from the Medes, gained without toil the very beautiful city of Zancle".

In the Journal of Hellenic Studies, vol. XXVIII, p. 56 is an article on "The Samians at Zancle" in which the wrong date given by Pausanias is discussed.

From Herodotus VII, 154 Zancle is mentioned as one of the towns reduced by Hippocrates and Gelon before the Samian invasion.

The question arises as to the meaning of the title "King" applied to Scythes, who seems to be regarded by Herodotus as under the authority of the Tyrant Hippocrates.

The story of Scythes is also told by Aelian (V.H. VIII, 17). The father of Cadmus the tyrant of Cos mentioned by Herodotus (VII, 163) is supposed by K.O. Müller (Dorians, vol. I, p. 193) to be identical with this King of Zancle. The subsequent removal of Cadmus to Zancle gives probability to this conjecture. At any rate we see how intimate was the relationship of the eastern Greeks with Sicily, and the flight of Scythes to the East points in the same direction.

One of the coins, no III of this early period, has been interpreted as having reference to the four different sets of colonists mentioned by the old writers. The four projections on the harbour represented on the coin are thought by Mr. A. J. Evans to suggest that four fortified divisions of the city were inhabited by the men from Cumæ, from Euboea, from Naxos mentioned by Strabo, and from those descended from the Sikels.

The history of Zankle as related by these ancient Greek writers lacks chronological perspective, and in order to understand the sequence of events we have to note that two hundred and thirty years passed between the settlement of the Cumeans and the arrival of Anaxilas on the scene. During that period the city prospered so well that a daughter colony was formed at Mylæ about thirty miles from Cape Pelorus and another at Himera. Thucydides says (VI, 5) "Himera was founded from Zancle by Euclides, Simus and Saco, and most of those who went to the colony were Chalcidians, though there were also united with them some exiles from Syracuse".

Strabo tells us (VI, 272) that "the Zanclaei of Mylæ founded Himera". Thucydides says (VI, 62) that Himera was the only Greek city on the north coast, and he probably regarded Mylæ as a suburb of Zancle or not an independent city.

As Himera was founded in 648 B.C. or 227 years after the foundation of Zancle, Mylæ must have been founded some years before that date.

We may gather from the flat fabric and incuse type of the earliest coins of Zancle that considerable intercourse with Magna Graecia had been continued. From their style we may consider these early coins to have been minted about the middle of the sixth century B.C., about a hundred years after the foundation of Mylæ and Himera.

In the Numismatic Chronicle for 1896 on p. 101 is an article by Arthur J. Evans entitled "Contributions to Sicilian Numismatics", illustrated by three plates (VIII-X). "Early last year the small hoard of early silver coins of Zankle and Naxos, to which the following notice refers, was found by some workmen who were blasting the rock for the new tram line on the Catania road near Messina. As will be seen the find is of special interest from the fact that it supplies for the first time from a Sicilian mint, coins struck on the early Italiot model, with the type repeated incuse on the reverse."—

"As to the date and occasion of the deposit, there are strong reasons for bringing it into connection with the capture of Zankle in 493 B.C. by the Samian and Milesian refugees, at the instigation of Anaxilas of Rhêgion. It is now that the early coinage of Zankle, comes to an end, and is succeeded by that bearing Samian and Rhêgine types, and the name of the Messanians or Messenians.

These earliest coins with the incuse reverse types are the only Sicilian coins which were issued in imitation of the Southern Italian coinage. They are not so broadly spread in fabric, but that is because they are drachms, weighing at most 88 grains, whereas the Italian coins were didrachms weighing about 120 grains.

The earliest coins shew that the Zanklaeans, though adhering to the Aeginitic standard of their Chalcidian founders, yet adopted the peculiar form of the coinage of Magna Graecia, on account of the greater connection which the Zanklaeans held with Rhegium and Italy. As an illustration of this close connection with Southern Italy we may note the coins in the Naples Museum, and in Garrucci's collection, and in the Messina find, bearing ϘPO on the obv. and a tripod and DA, similar type, and weighing 118 grains.

Mr. George Macdonald in his "Coin-types" has shown that the similarity of fabric did not imply any political confederation". "For a federal coinage uniformity in weight would have been of vastly greater importance than similarity of fabric." Yet of the cities concerned, Rhegium and Zancle used one system, Poseidonia used another, while the whole of the rest used a third.

The type of the coins is one of the earliest of those having reference to locality — the harbour is represented as the most striking feature of the city. These local types are common in Sicily, especially those which refer to the river on which the city was built, or the fountain for which it was famed. Examples of these are found at Himera, Selinus, Gelas, Crimisus, the river Amenanus at Catana, the Crimisus at Segesta.

The inscription on the early coins of Zancle is found on the Obverse together with the parasema or town-badge, as also at Croton, and Metapontum; in later times the inscription was transferred to the Reverse.

The earliest coins bear no inscription, the town badge being all the distinctive mark necessary. But as mints multiplied and money was carried farther afield, something more was needed, and the inscription adopted.

The inscription was generally in the genitive case, but we meet with nominative cases, not only as ΔΑΝΚΛΕ, but also ΑΚΡΑΓΑΣ, ΤΑΡΑΣ, ΓΕΛΑΣ.

It has recently been said that "Art is the most vivid, the most convincing and eloquent expression of the life of its own age which the past has handed down to us; and more especially is this true of the great periods of art, the creative epochs, as they may be called: for it is the art of such epochs which is fullest of life, and which has the greatest collective impulse of conviction to back it. This it is which gives to such epochs the aspect of agreement and uniformity which we call "style". " The archaic art on the coins of this first period bears witness to the intellectual growth of the Greeks; they were giving up the old conventional methods of representing objects, and showing evidence in their work of direct study and observation of Nature. The stiff old archaic forms were coming to life with the dawn of the intellectual life of the nation. To the Greek, who loved definite clear thought, the definite art of the sculptor end engraver was the most natural manner in which he could express by art his ideas, and hence the conception formed of Divinity was itself that of a sculptor.

"No wonder that the Greek mind and genius should have expressed itself in sculpture and should have spoken that language with a kind of native ease and fluency."

The gradual growth of beauty in the sculpture of the Greek coins has more than a merely artistic interest and significance; it is the visible symptom of an inward growth of the nobler part of human nature.

The coins of this first period owe much of their interest to the fact of their being the expression of the minds of the Greeks at the dawn of their awakening to the day of western civilization, a dawn dark with the struggle then being carried on against the old effete eastern stagnation. It is by shewing the connection of Greek coin-engraving with history and life that we may best enlarge the somewhat narrow circle of students of Greek Numismatics, a subject too often regarded as occupied in dry as dust studies of a long buried past.

COINS OF THE FIRST SAMIAN SETTLERS-493 B.C.

In this first period we may place the coins issued immediately after the invasion of the Samians and Milesians in 493 B.C. They seem to have been very soon brought under the power of Anaxilas, who then ruled over both Rhegium and Zancle.

As the Rhegian coins of Anaxilas are essentially Sicilian, both in type and fabric, we may naturally gather that he ruled in both cities, but the influence of the Samians was strong enough to cause the change of type in Rhegium from the old bull with a human face to the Samian lion type. The accounts of this period, given by Strabo, Thucydides and Pausanias, are not easy to understand, nor can they be well reconciled, but our coins are witnesses of greater importance, and shew that Anaxilas did not drive out the Samians; as Thucydides says (οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον ἐκβαλών). The legend on these coins with the Samian type is MESSENION, and therefore the name of the city was changed before the driving out of the Samians.

In the account of these events given by Pausanias the Messenians are most prominent, and the Samians are not mentioned.

Thucydides says Anaxilas "colonized their country with a mixed population", among these peoples many may have been Messenians; Anaxilas himself was a Messenian.

The expulsion of the Samians is probably marked by the introduction of the mule car type.

Julius Pollux (V. 75, p. 261, Ed. Dendort) relates that Anaxilas introduced this type to celebrate the victory of his mule car at Olympia (confer p. 255, Coins of Magna Graecia). The Messenian origin of the tyrant is also commemorated by the hare on the obverse.

On a rare tetradrachm of Messane the god Pan is represented as caressing a hare. These coins were known as "hares" just as those of Athens were known as "owls" or those of Ægina as "tor-

These coins must have been issued just before the end of this period, for Anaxilas bore a considerable part in the quarrel which brings this period to a close. Herodotus tells the story (VII 165).

" Gelon would have assisted the Greeks, had not Terillus, son of Crinippus, who was tyrant of Himera, being expelled from Himera by Theron, son of Ænesidemus, king of the Agrigentines, at that time brought in an army of 300.000 men under the conduct of Amilcar, son of Hanno, king of the Carthaginians. Terillus persuaded him by the hospitality existing between them, and especially by the zeal of Anaxilas, son of Critines, who being tyrant of Rhegium, and having given his children as hostages into the hands of Amilcar, induced him to enter Sicily in order to avenge the injury done to his father-in-law. For Anaxilas had married a daughter of Terillus whose name was Cydippe. " Anaxilas seems to have escaped, for his daughter was married to Hiero in 478 B. C. about two years before the death of her father.

SCHAEFER, HANS (Austr.). Contemporary Sculptor and Medallist, born at Sternberg in Moravia, 13. February 1875, and apprenticed for four years to the engraver Matthäus Marschall, father of the medallist Rudolf Marschall, at Vienna. He then entered the School of Art, in the division of Prof. Stephan Schwartz, and showed himself a very talented pupil. In 1902 he settled in business on his own account.

His first work of note, executed in that same year, is a Prize Medal for Running, which received due recognition.

The charm of Schaefer's medals and plaquettes lies in the realism with which he has depicted characteristic Viennese popular types. His style is original throughout, and he is very successful with portraits.

The following Medals and Plaquettes by Hans Schaefer are all exceedingly well executed : Memorial Portrait-medal of Pope Leo XIII, 1903 (issued by Christlbauer); — Portrait-plaquette of Wenzel Seidls, on his 40th Anniversary as a public singer, 1904; types such as, alas, are only too fast disappearing. He succeeds in giving life-like portraits, which at the same time show a delicacy of manipulation and surety of delineation which prove that the artist possesses a true understanding of his subject. He is himself a typical Viennese, infected with their mirth and their sorrow, and it is thus that he is enabled to give expression to their characteristic temperament in his plastic work.

SCHAEFFER, JOSEPH (Germ.). Appointed Assistant Mint-master at Mannheim, 16. May 1764; died in 1766. He appears to have worked under his father Wiegand Schäffer as Engraver at the Mannheim mint, and I have seen it stated that the filled the post of Mint-master at Darmstadt, but I have not been able to verify the accuracy of this statement.

SCHÄFFER, WIEGAND (Germ.). Mint-engraver and Medallist at Mayence and Heidelberg 1716-1744; Mint-warden at Mannheim 1745-1758. He was born at Copenhagen in 1687 and died at Mannheim in 1758. Bolzenthal reckons him amongst the best artists of his time. His coin-dies of the Palatinate certainly deserve recognition for their artistic merit.

Prince Elector Charles Theodore, 1743.

On a $1\frac{1}{2}$ Thaler of Charles Philip, struck at Mannheim, 1740, the artist's signature is SCHEFR.

SCHAERDINGER, STEPHAN (Austr.). Mint-master at Landshut, 1458.

SCHÄUFEL, JOSEPH IGNATZ (also SCHAEUFEL VON AHAMSTEIN) (Germ.). Medallist of the latter part of the eighteenth century and beginning of the nineteenth, circ. 1768-1804; died in 1812. He was born at Passau in 1733, and first worked as a belt-maker. Becoming acquainted with the medallist Schega, he owed to his patronage the appointment of Mint-engraver at Munich. He took a title of nobility which was however not officially recognized.

As a Modeller in wax, this artist was distinctly successful, and his medallic works display certain qualities, without rising to the merit of Schega's productions.

Domanig (Die Deutsche Medaille, Pl. 72, n° 652) reproduces the artist's self Portrait-medal; obv. Bust to right; Rℒ. HVIC SEQVE SVVMQVE LABOREM DEDICAT. MDCCLXXX. Few of Schäufel's coins are signed. I have come across the following: Conventions Thaler of Charles Theodore, 1778 (signed: I. SCH.), 1779, 1781, 1782, 1783, 1784, 1786-1794.

SCHAFFER, MATHÄUS (Germ.). Probably two Engravers of that name, Junior and Senior were working at Nuremberg as Die-sinkers; the Elder, circ. 1629-1655 (Ammon gives the date of his burial as 1654), and the Younger, circ. 1680. Hauschild has ascribed erroneously to the Elder Schaffer the medals described by Erman under the Master M.S. (Vide Vol. IV, p. 184) and which all belong to the sixteenth century. The author of Die Medaillen und Münzen des Gesamthauses Wittelsbach suggests the attribution to this artist of a Portrait-medal of Duke Ernest of Bavaria, undated (signed: M.S.F.) and in the Wunderly Catalogue a Thaler of Alwig VII., count of Sulz, 1622 (signed: M.S.) is also tentatively ascribed to him. Kull however thinks that the Engraver M.S. of the Thalers and Double Thalers of Heidelberg, 1627, with bust of Maximilian I., was MATHIAS STEIN of Coblenz, the author of the $\frac{3}{4}$ Thalerklippe and Half Thalers of Philipp Christoph von Sötern, archbishop of Treves, and Thalers of Frederick V. of Baden, etc. (J. V. Kull, Aus bayerischen Archiven, Mitth. d. bayer. num. Gesellschaft, 1900, p. 40, note 1).

SCHALENBERGER, MICHAEL (Germ.). Mint-engraver at Nuremberg, circ. 1601-1608, and later Mint-master, 1622. Among his medallic productions I may mention: Visit of Queen Wilhelmina and Queen Emma to Amsterdam, 1891 (obv. by I. P. M. SCHARFF, ANTON (Austr.). One of the most celebrated Medallists of modern times, son of the Vienna Mint-Medallist Michael Scharff, was born at Vienna on 10. June 1845. He was early instructed in drawing and modelling, and in 1860 entered the Academy of decorative Arts. Two years later he was admitted as a pupil at the 'Graveur-Akademie' attached to the Vienne mint, and studied there under David Boehm. In 1866 he was appointed Assistant-engraver at the Mint, and Engraver in 1868. In 1881 he became Director of the 'Graveur-Akademie'. The distinction of Court-medallist was conferred upon him in 1887. He died on 6. July 1903 at Brunn.

Scharff was a Knight of the Order of the Iron Crown and of the Order of Francis Joseph; Knight of the Bavarian Order of St. Michael; Knight of the Toscan Civil Merit Order; Commander of the Servian St. Sava Order; Knight of the Order of the Star of Roumania. The Emperor of Austria further bestowed upon him the golden Cross of Merit with crown, and the Prince of Bulgaria awarded to him the Order of Merit of Bulgaria. The artist also took a number of prizes: the Karl Ludwig medal; the Reichel Prize 1890; the large gold medals at the Fine Arts Exhibitions of Munich and Berlin; the Grand Prix at the Paris Universal Exhibition in 1900; gold medals at Dresden and Antwerp, etc.

Scharff's medallic works are very numerous and have placed him at the head of the Austrian school of medallists. He was a fine draughtsman, modelled well, and depicted the familiar aspects of nature with remarkable delicacy of sentiment. Compared to the French school, his style is perhaps lacking in softness and over minute and delicate, which is the only criticism that one can offer. His portraits are vigorous; every figure has been studied from the life with a rare truthfulness and appreciation, the general type and the individual character being equally well represented.

LE CERCLE DES PHILADELPHES AU CAP-FRANÇAIS (SAINT-DOMINGUE, HAITI), 1784.

Quelques personnes classent les jetons du Cercle des Philadelphes parmi les pièces maçonniques; c'est une erreur, car cette Société ne s'occupait que de sciences, d'arts, de belles-lettres.

On trouve sur elle des détails précis dans la Description de la partie française de Saint-Domingue, par Moreau de Saint-Méry (Philadelphie, 1797, t. I, p. 348 et suiv.). L'auteur pouvait en parler savamment; il habitait le Cap-Français lorsque le Cercle se constitua; il y exerçait la fonction d'avocat et, en 1785, il y fut nommé membre du Conseil supérieur.

En 1784, un petit groupe de personnes s'était formé pour réfuter les théories d'un disciple de Mesmer, qui opérait au Cap. Après quoi, ces quelques habitants se dirent qu'il pourrait être utile pour la colonie d'instituer « une réunion de colons, ayant un véritable amour pour elle et s'entretenant de ce qui pouvait être capable de hâter ses progrès et de la porter à son plus haut degré de splendeur ». « On s'électrisa réciproquement, et dans ce petit comité, l'on créa le Cercle des Philadelphes, » le 15 août 1784. La première séance publique eut lieu le 11 mai 1785, et, dès cette année, l'association entreprit des essais de culture de cochenille, organisa un jardin botanique, institua un prix de 1.650 livres pour la meilleure méthode « de fabriquer un papier à l'abri des ravages des insectes qui, dans les colonies, font disparaître rapidement et les livres et les manuscrits ».

A la fin de 1786, le Roi accorda au Cercle « une autorisation provisoire »; en avril 1788, l'intendant de Saint-Domingue lui alloua une subvention annuelle de 3.000 livres. En 1789, le 17 mai, des lettres patentes lui furent concédées avec une annuité de 10.000 livres, mais « sous le titre de Société royale des Sciences et Arts du Cap-Français », sans que Moreau de Saint-Méry, qui pourtant avait participé aux démarches à Paris, nous dise le motif de ce changement de nom. Au même temps, le Cercle entra en relations d'échanges avec l'Académie des sciences, la Société d'agriculture de Paris, les Musées de Paris, Bordeaux et Toulouse; il avait parmi les membres de son bureau « un garde du cabinet de physique et d'histoire naturelle et un directeur du Jardin des plantes »; il publia des mémoires sur les épizooties, le tétanos, les eaux minérales, etc. Dans tout cela rien de maçonnique.

Moreau de Saint-Méry nous décrit les jetons de la Société; elle a, dit-il, « sur ses jetons et sur son cachet, une ruche d'abeilles placée sur un tertre, surmontée d'un soleil rayonnant avec cette légende : Sub sole labor, et pour exergue : Société royale des Sciences et Arts du Cap-Français 1784 ».

A vrai dire, nous ne connaissons pas de pièce correspondant

Le n° 1, de 29 mill., est sans doute le premier en date contemporain de la fondation du Cercle; le second, du module de 31 mill. porte à l'A la date de 1788, qui le rapproche de l'année du changement de nom.

Dès l'obtention des lettres patentes, de nouveaux coins furent sans doute commandés pour la Société royale; furent-il exécutés? Probablement que oui; car Moreau de Saint-Méry est un auteur très précis; il était à Paris en 1789 et il n'a sans doute fait sa description qu'à bon escient. Mais si les jetons d'un troisième type furent frappés, il se peut bien qu'arrivés au Cap-Français au milieu des événements révolutionnaires, alors que les associés avaient d'autres préoccupations que de se réunir, ils n'aient pas été mis en circulation et même aient été détruits en bloc dans quelque pillage ou dans le grand incendie du 20 juin 1793, qui, allumé par les noirs insurgés dans tous les quartiers, consomma la ruine de la ville du Cap.

Quoi qu'il en soit, le Cercle des Philadelphes, berceau de la Société royale, était simplement une association scientifique et littéraire.

THE KING'S EFFIGY ON INDIAN COINS.

When the new Indian coinage was designed at the beginning of King Edward's reign, his Majesty's effigy was made to correspond as closely as possible with the design adopted for this country. The first British Emperor of India was, in consequence, represented to the ignorant and superstitious masses of India without a crown or any of the insignia of Imperial sway. Nothing could have been more alien to Indian conceptions of sovereignty, and in its way the mistake was serious from a political standpoint. It was even said to have been the cause of some serious disturbance in Madras.

Some correspondence the Bombay Chamber of Commerce has had with the Government of India shows that though the error was persisted in steps were in progress to remedy the defect at the time of King Edward's death, and that it is not likely to be repeated in the new reign. When commenting on the proposed issue of the new nickel Anna (penny) coin a year or two ago, the Chamber pointed out to the Government that it would be politic were the cast of the Emperor's head to wear a crown in all denominations of Indian coin. The suggestion was carried out with the new nickel coin, but coins of other denominations continued to be minted bearing the old design. In a letter dealing with the question of the coinage of the new reign, the Bombay Chamber has pointed out that the Edward coinage has not inspired feelings of respect or veneration for Royalty, a common belief in the native mind being that the effigy on the rupee was that of some official, and not that of the King-Emperor, who, in accordance with their ideas of regal dignity, could only be depicted with a crown and other emblems of sovereignty. The effigy that approached closest to the Indian ideal of a Sovereign Ruler was that depicted on the coinage towards the end of Queen Victoria's reign, when her Majesty's head and bust were represented with crown and Royal robes.

Replying to this letter, the Government of India state that designs were actually prepared some time ago for a crowned effigy of his late Majesty on the next issue of rupees; but his Majesty's death prevented their submission for approval. The proper authorities in England have now been addressed, the letter states, with a request for a suitable representation of the present King-Emperor. It will probably be possible to use the same design on Indian stamps; but it may be pointed out that as millions of postal packets annually reach India from this country, the end in view will not be fully attained unless the design for stamps adopted for the United Kingdom also conforms to the conceptions of Sovereign dignity entertained by the King-Emperor's Indian subjects, who constitute three-fourths of the entire population of his Dominions.

MEDALLIC ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

(British Museum). — The extraordinary richness of the medallic treatment of the reign of William III. is further shown by this issue of the valuable series of annotated plates put forth by the Trustees of the British Museum. These plates, numbered CI. to CX., and supplying about 120 reproductions of medals, cover the period only from July, 1695, to the close of 1698. A medal or a whole group of medals seems to have been struck to commemorate incidents whether trivial or important — such as the founding of the Amicable Society, or the Peace of Ryswick. The more notable medals struck in the latter half of 1695 recall the bombardment of Brussels and the retaking of Namur. In 1698 an interesting pair of small medals were struck in gold and silver, illustrating the respective fortunes of James II. and William III.; the reverse of the former shows a crown tossed about in a boat on a tempestuous sea, and the latter a firmly established trophy of arms and banners. The alleged plot, early in 1696, to assassinate William III. near Turnham Green on his way from Richmond to Kensington, brought forth a large crop of medals, wherein the opponents of the Stuarts did not hesitate to use sundry Scriptural illustrations implying that both James and Louis fostered the cause of murder. The Peace of Ryswick, signed in September, 1697, afforded free scope for the ingenuity of the medal-strikers, who were fairly successful in their emblematical devices. The most effective and best executed of these is a large silver medal, by D. Drapentier, struck by the city of Dordrecht. The obverse represents Peace locking the door of the temple of Janus, whilst the reverse exhibits a seated figure of Europe with an overflowing cornucopia by her side, and a fleet of merchantmen on the sea in the background. It is perhaps worthy of note that all the profuse imagery on medals of this period is purely classical.

It might have been supposed that the section containing Plates CXI. to CXX., which treats of the latter part of the reign of William III., beginning with January, 1699, and ends with 1704, in the reign of Queen Anne, would be somewhat dull, but, on the contrary, it proves to be particularly entertaining.

After the defeat of the Turks at Zenta in September, 1697 (a misprint says 1797), William offered his services to mediate between the Sultan and the Emperor Leopold I. The negotiations were carried on at Carlowitz, and resulted in an armistice for twenty-five years. On a silver medal struck to commemorate the Treaty of Carlowitz, signed on January 23rd 1699, William, by a quaintly exaggerated conceit, is represented as Hercules, in the character of a coppersmith, hammering up the fissures which war had occasioned upon the globe.

One of the strangest medals illustrated in this part, though there is no warrant for calling it historical, is a unique example in lead, dated January 14th 1701. It is termed the "Swapping Mallard". On the first January of at least the last three centuries a feast has been held at All Souls College, Oxford, to commemorate the mysterious finding of an overgrown mallard when the foundations of the College were being laid. It is related that when Archbishop Chichele decided to found a college at Oxford for the souls of those who had perished in the wars with France, and was doubtful as to the best site, he was advised in a vision of the night to build his house in the High Street, near the church of St. Mary, and to lay the foundation stone at a corner towards Cattys Street, where on digging a swapping mallard would be found imprisoned in a drain. The archbishop told his friends of the dream, and at the spot indicated a mallard was found as big as a bustard or an ostrich. In commemoration of this event the Fellows went in procession on the centenary anniversary, pretending to search for the tutelary bird. The medal illustrates the procession of Fellows, one of whom bears the mallard on a pole.

The Queen Anne medals are chiefly concerned with the victories of Marlborough. The writer of the letterpress is evidently patriotic, and loath to admit that the forces of England were not invariably victorious. In connexion with the naval engagement at Malaga in August, 1704, which was of doubtful issue, the British Museum collection includes both English and French commemorative medals. As to the latter the writer remarks in general terms, which had better have been omitted : "Like others of the French official medals, these are not in strict accordance with historical facts; the English and Dutch were not put to flight, and it was rather the French who were lacking in courage", &c. It would be interesting to read the comments of French authorities on English medals.

A YEAR'S WORK AT THE MINT.

The 40th annual report of the Deputy-Master and Comptroller of the Mint, for the year 1909, has been published [Cd. 5266].

The report states that the decline in the demands for Imperial coins noted in the previous year's report continued during the earlier part of 1909, a considerable revival, however especially for silver, making itself felt in the later months. About 75¾ millions of such coins were struck, or some 16 millions less than in the previous year. The gold and silver coinages approximated closely to those of 1908, the falling-off being mainly in the coinage of bronze. The decrease in the Imperial coinage was accompanied by a small increase in the total volume of colonial coinages due to very large nickel-bronze coinages for East Africa and Uganda and Nigeria. More than 113 millions pieces were struck in all, amounting in value to over 15½ millions pounds.

The issues of gold coin, although falling short of those of 1908, were very high, exceeding the average of the previous ten years by over £3,000,000. Silver issues show a considerable rise, due to a general demand for such coin, especially for West Africa, towards the end of the year, while the fall in those of bronze brings the total issues for the year in this metal below the average of the previous ten years.

Gold bullion weighing 4,079,739.260 oz. standard, of the value of £15,885, 484 14s. 10d., was imported into the Mint for coinage during the year. The value of the light gold coin received for recoinage was £3,000,000 and it weight 762,178.0350z. standard. The gold coin issued during the years was as follows : — Sovereigns, £11,800,000; half-sovereigns, £2,000,000. The gold coins received and weighed at the Bank of England during the year amounted to 54,853,882 pieces, as compared with 54,558,704 in 1908, and the percentage of light, both in sovereigns, and half-sovereigns, the latter more particularly, was lower than in the previous year.

The silver coin issued during the year amounted to £1,389,528 (exclusive of Maundy money), as against a total of £815,397 in 1908. The issue of Imperial bronze coin in 1909 reached the total of £815,397 in 1908. The issue of Imperial bronze coin in 1909 reached the total of £121,811, a falling-off of £33,769 as compared with the previous year.

The supply of British silver coin to the Commonwealth of Australia terminated with the year under review, and a local silver currency is, under an arrangement with his Majesty's Government, gradually taking its place. The first consignment of this currency, which is to be struck in the Home Department, where the designs were prepared, was sent to Australia in January last. The obverse bears the crowned effigy of his late Majesty King Edward VII. looking to the right, with the legend "Edwardus VII. D.G. Britt. Omn. Rex F.D. Ind. Imp.". The reverse bears the coat-of-arms of Australia, as supplied to the Department by the Government of the Commonwealth, above which is inscribed the denomination of the coin, and beneath the date.

By Order in Council, dated October 18, 1909, the Ceylon copper 5-cent and quarter-cent pieces were demonetized. The 5-cent piece had been found inconvenient and cumbersome, and it was decided to replace it by a nickel-bronze coin of the same weight as the new Indian anna (60 grains). The coin was made legal tender in Ceylon by a local proclamation, dated December 13, 1909, and the first instalment was despatched from London last October.

The number of medals issued was 25,821, as compared with 10, 169 in 1908, 23,000 in 1907, and 28,959 in 1906.

The general account of expenses and receipts for 1909 shows a profit of £85,951, as against £560,728 in the previous year. The estimated expenditure of the Department for the financial year

During the financial year 1909-10 the gold coinage amounted to £ 15,525,391, as compared with £ 16,212,150 in 1908-9, and the gross waste was ascertained at stocktaking to amount to £ 7,728 11s. 11d. As the amount realized by the sale of gold sweep was £ 1,588 16s. 1d., the net waste amounted to £ 6,139 15s. 10d., equivalent to £ 395 4s. 3d. per million sterling. The value of the Imperial silver coinage during the same period was £ 1,619,344, the gross waste on which was £ 1,609 11s. 8 d. Deducting £ 142 5s. 8d., the sum realized by the sale of silver sweep, the net waste is shown to be £ 1,467 6 s.

There was again an increase in the number of persons charged under the Coinage Act as compared with the three previous years, and an increase of 15 convictions on the number for the year 1908. In connexion with the coinage prosecutions for the year, about 1,550 pieces of counterfeit coin were taken possession of by the police.

Mr. SPIELMAN ON THE NEW COINAGE

We are told that the Five-shilling piece is to disappear and that all coins are henceforward to bear their value upon their reverse. If this is to involve the suppression of Benedetto Pistrucci's noble design of St. George and the Dragon, as has been rumoured to be the case, not artists only but every one who can appreciate a magnificent composition will mourn the loss of the finest reverse, one brilliantly adapted to its purpose, to be found on the coins of any nation since the quadriga-tetradrachm and dekadrachm of Syracuse. It may be recalled how Dominique Denon, director of the Paris Mint, on seeing the pattern sovereign and five-shilling piece of 1817, declared that they were "the handsomest coins in Europe."

I am aware that a certain prejudice exists in the minds of the lovers of ultra-realism, due mainly to a hasty and unconsidered pronouncement of Mr. Ruskin to the effect that St. George is represented as ill-equipped for the combat inasmuch as he holds in his hand a sword too short to reach the dragon at his feet. This is based on a complete misunderstanding. As a matter of fact St. George has already used his spear and slain the monster; one half of it quivers in the reptile's writhing body, now in its death throes—the other half the warrior has flung away, and it lies upon the ground. The sword is but a supplementary weapon, scarcely needed even to deliver a coup de grâce. No doubt, on the Peter the Great five-kopeck piece and on certain other Russian coins, on the Elector of Saxony's Knight of the Garter medal (1678), on the Breton peasant medals (S. Georgius Equitum Patronus and In Tempestate Securitas), as well as on our own Army Temperance medal, the saintly knight is represented with a spear, engaged in an earlier stage of the fight. But other die-sinkers have employed Pistrucci's design with the sword and riven spear, such for example as the authors of the St. George's Rifles (medal) 1859, and the Bank of Canada halfpenny token of 1852. Pistrucci had authority for his version of the encounter (as Mr. L. Forrer tells us in his "Dictionary of Medallists") in the shell-cameo of the "Bataille coquille" in the collection of the Duke of Orleans, which Giovanni Pichler had copied in Rome in intaglio. Of this intaglio Pistrucci had himself made four copies.

The superlative merit of the design consists not only in the figures of the horse and rider, splendid as they are and true to nature (Pistrucci, it is said, had an unsurpassed knowledge of the horse and "rode like a centaur"); not only in the fine classic character and "style" of the whole. It lies in the "arrangement" and in the felicitous lines and masses of the perfectly balanced composition. Any one can see, for example, how the curvilinear mass of the flying mantle balances that of the dragon and how every line is purposeful throughout and in its place, and how the whole adapts itself absolutely to the field it is designed to fill. We can make a change, no doubt, by discarding the masterpiece which has maintained its place triumphantly since the days of George III. to the present time, but any change will assuredly be for the worse, as there is no one living endowed with the genius which raised Pistrucci to his pinnacle in the eyes of Europe. If it is inevitable, as we are told, that we must be informed on the coin's face—what everybody knows the world over—that a sovereign is a sovereign and half a sovereign is ten shillings, then I would plead, as a compromise, that we should go back to Pistrucci's earliest types of 1817 and that the St. George group should be encompassed by the circular Garter on which the value of the pieces may be inscribed. In this way, at least, a very real calamity to the national art—which many regard as a wanton outrage—may be averted.

The only people who have any valid objection to the design, I believe, are the Chinese of Hong-kong, who regard it as a slight upon their sacred emblem. But this, it is understood, applies mainly to the five-shilling piece or the dollar; and as these are to be removed from currency, the susceptibilities of Cathay need no longer weigh in favour of the contemplated sacrifice.

REVIEWS.

The British Numismatic Journal and Proceedings of the British Numismatic Society, 1908. Edited by W. J. Andrew, P. W. P. Carlyon-Britton, and L. A. Lawrence, Vol. V. (Harrison and Sons). — The fifth annual volume of the British Numismatic Journal is as well illustrated and informing as any of its predecessors. It is also as great in bulk, consisting of upwards of 550 quarto pages.

The contents of this issue are exceptionally varied, including a long and admirably illustrated article by Mr. Sharp Ogden on 'The Roman Mint and Early Britain'; the 'Cross as a Mint-Mark,' by Mr. Shirley Fox; the 'Evolution of Portraiture on the Silver Penny,' by Mr. Andrew; and 'Coin-Collecting in the Deccan and Mysore,' by Major R. P. Jackson. The most substantial and instructive is the second part of 'A Numismatic History of the Reigns of William I. and II.,' by Mr. Carlyon-Britton.

The first part of the 'Portraiture of our Stuart Monarchs on their Coins and Medals,' by Miss Helen Farquhar, covers about a hundred pages, and is well worth attention. The coins of James I. of England and James VI. of Scotland supply an unusually extended series of portraits, beginning from 1582, when in his sixteenth year his effigy first appeared on the coins of his Northern Kingdom, and, with many changes, extended over the twenty-two years of his English rule. James had a great weakness for classical dress and customs, and was consequently styled Cæsar Augustus on his coronation medal. In 1619 laurels were introduced on his coinage, which excited a good deal of popular ridicule. In his pictures James is often represented wearing a high-crowned hat, and sometimes on his medals the crown is actually superimposed on the hat, with comical effect. Even on one of his Scottish coins a remarkable dome-shaped erection covers the king's head. This hat-piece, as it was called, was a gold coin of the value of 80*s*. A medal struck to commemorate the peace with Spain concluded in August, 1604, represents him wearing a hat of much more becoming shape, wide-brimmed and graceful, but surmounted by the crown. It is impossible to help wondering whether James ever in reality wore this queer combination of hat and crown. In this particular medal there was apparently no attempt to conceal the king's ugliness. Anthony Weldon mentions James I.'s "large eyes, ever rowling after any stranger that came into his presence," and these eyes are particularly noticeable in this portrait.

When Charles I. followed his father on the throne, for the sake of convenience the deceased ruler's effigy was used for some little time instead of the likeness of the new king. The marked improvement in the coinage of this reign, especially in portraiture, is supposed to have been due, to a considerable extent, to Charles's own love of art and numismatics. The beautifully embossed examples for twenty-shilling pieces, with an uncrowned bust, are considered to be striking portraits. The magnificent five-broad piece, usually known as the Juxon Medal, now in the British Museum, is discussed by Miss Farquhar at some length. Charles's earlier presentments do not appear to have pleased him, for they were repeatedly changed in the first part of his reign until a more satisfactory likeness was produced, probably from the Van Dyck pictures. It is said of Charles that he was easy to portray, and Roger de Piles in his ' Principles of Painting ' tells how a blind artist ot the seventeenth century modelled a wax rendering of a marble bust of the king by the aid of the sense of touch only, and that it was very like.

It was owing to Charle's taste that such a complete change in the fashion in men's dress came about soon after his accession to the throne. At that time the stiff and uncompromising ruff, which had held its ground, though reduced in size, for about a century, gave way to the graceful, falling, lace-trimmed collar which was started in Madrid in 1623, and speedily popularized in England by Van Dyck's portraits. The ruff, however, does appear round the neck of Charles I. in the Dominion-of-the-Sea medal by Briot in 1630; but another medal of the like character, cast by Briot in 1639, gives much more grace to the head and profile of Charles I. by showing him with a broad, untrimmed, turn-down collar.

A certain amount of attention is paid to the Civil War badges of the king and queen, in graceful ornamental borders, as executed by Rawlings. In the account of the portraits of Charles II. it will be news to many to learn from Miss Farquhar that this king had "absolutely no personal vanity," and is said to have been most anxious to introduce a simpler taste in dress into England, less liable to change than that which he had seen at the Court of France. In support of this, Pepys is quoted. On October 8th, 1666, he wrote: —

"The King hath yesterday in Council declared his resolution of setting a fashion in dress which will never alter. It will be a vest. I know not well how, but it is to teach the nobility thrift and will do good."

A few ways later the diarist adds: —

"This day [October 13th] the King begins to put on his new vest..... a long cassock close to the body of black cloth and pinked with white silk under it, and a coat over it, and the legs ruffled with black riband like a pigeon's leg..... They say the King says the pinking upon the whites makes them too much like magpies, and he therefore hath bespoke one of plain velvet".

The author of this paper fails, however, to substantiate in any way the idea that this mild effort after a certain amount of thrift and absence of garishness in the male dress of those of high birth was anything but a transient effort on the part of the King. Unlike his father, he was the reverse of handsome; in fact, it was said of him that he had "a most saturnine harsh countenance." The sardonic curl of the lips is especially marked in all his coinage, whether executed by Simon or Roettier.

THOMAS STOKES.

On the 13th June, at "Edgbaston" Heidelberg-road Alphington, Thomas Stokes in his 80th year.

I was surprised and grieved to see the above in my 'Argus' of June 14th; although Mr. Stokes had been feeble for some time, his end was not expected, in fact I had just arranged to see him and have another chat about the old "token days". I am reminded of the many pleasant and profitable interviews I have had with him in the past, when searching for numismatical information pertaining to Australia.

It is well known that Mr. Thomas Stokes struck many of the large issues of tokens used here in the early days. He arrived in Victoria, January 1st, 1854, and after a couple of years of unsuccessful prospecting settled in Melbourne.

Mr. Taylor in 1853 sent his coining press to Melbourne in charge of Mr. Schafe. This was used to strike the Port Phillip gold pieces 2 oz—1 oz—½ and ¼ oz, as also the shilling and sixpenny pieces; it was after the 1854 Melbourne Exhibition erected at North Melbourne, being used to strike tokens. In 1857 it was purchased by Mr. Thomas Stokes, who used it to strike the large number of tokens issued by him in his own name and for other people.

This coining press is still in use; it is in first rate order and capable of striking almost any coin or medal. I have always found Mr. Stokes most courteous and always ready to give me any information. He told me that by 1862 he had got all his machinery brought to perfection, having machines to roll the metal out to the even and regular thickness; then in 1863 all his plant was thrown idle by the issue in Melbourne of the British bronze coins (now in circulation). Most of the Melbourne tokens after withdrawal were shipped to Sydney.

After 1863 Mr. Thomas Stokes and later Stokes and Martin issued a large number of tokens for firms in New South Wales, New Zealand, West Australia. The West Australian ones were for John Henderson, dated 1874 and no date; these were the last tokens issued by the Stokes firm.

Since the tokens went out the firm of Stokes and Martin, now Stokes and Sons, have executed many different varieties of Commemorative and Exhibition medals, many of them being beautiful works.

In 1887 the Jubilee of Queen Victoria proved a very busy time with this firm; they issued for the different localities and districts of Australia a large number of different medals, many of these handing down to posterity the different commemorative buildings of that time. At the Diamond Jubilee 1897 Stokes and Sons struck medals, for seventy-two different cities, towns &c. bearing Arms of the different places &c. displayed on them. It would take too much of your space to mention the many examples of their work.
